VIPASSANA INSIGHT MEDITATION

“Theravadan Buddhism, teachings-practice of Gautama the Buddha, as taught by S N Goenka following in the tradition of U BA KHIN.

*Simply Siddhartha Gautama was searching for the meaning of life ~ Renouncing after the revelation of experiencing the four noble Truths, he left his Royal and family household to discover the sacred teachings.
For seven years he encountered the great masters and lived an ascetic life.
In Bodh Gaya he renounced his vows and then experienced ‘enlightenment’
The teachings of Vipassana Bhava are based on his unique human discovery.
The knowledge before was that by controlling the mind, our thoughts, we could create a way to become self-aware and therefore to end human suffering, ‘dukkha’.
Hindu/Yoga philosophy taught by great sages was based on this concept and practice.
However, Siddhartha realised this was not enough to be truly free of all Karmic bonds of the human condition and therefore reincarnation, flowing of future lives of suffering.
His unique discovery was that Cosmic energy is received by the five senses of the body and mind. Previously this energy was seen as the cause of the Karma-mind reactions and therefore, the need to control the thoughts so as to be able to control these reactions.*

*The mind was seen as dualistic and blindly reacting to positive and negative stimulus ~ desire, craving, wanting, rejecting and humans were caught in the reactions to this flow.
Buddha in his meditation (vipassana) realised the energetic flow arriving at the five senses*

was first translated at the streaming sub conscious level (Bhavanga citta) of the human ~ From the subconscious there was an immediate sensation experienced on the body/mind.

This sensation, feeling of the Karmic body/mind is the impetus for the quality of response.

This is the driver of interaction with the human dimension, and it can be realised, known, be made aware of by observing the sensations acting on the body-mind at any moment in time ~

By witnessing these sensations equanimously, Buddha discovered that the body/mind would not be a slave to one’s sub-atomic karmic field (Sankharas) and therefore with this knowing

human beings would allow for one’s individual Karma to leave this karmic stream which was the cause of the reactions (suffering) of the human being, not the controls of the mind

through different concepts, psychological, cultural, social and instinct-survival demands.

To achieve this level of ‘Observing the Sensations’ one has to first develop a level of Observation by learning “Anapana” which allows for the concentrated Focusing on a point of the body (under the nose and above the upper lip). Once a level has been achieved one can then move throughout the entire body and mind ~ Observing equanimously the sensations at that point but not being fixated on any point, but moving throughout the whole body/mind observing all

sensations with the realisation that the nature of the sensations is to continuously change, impermanently (Anicca) as a direct correlation to the changing sub-conscious field, that way the sub-atomic particles (sankharas) can dissolve and not determine a reaction in the mind ~

We realise that our fixed 'Ego' is a false paradigm because changing energetic fields exist not a central focus on 'my personal characteristics'.

We are therefore free from producing further false (Karma), ignorant ~ reactions effecting our lives by the false belief in our mind's absolute power."

Curating Digital-Collage. Cut & Paste * Invention * Intention * ART IS IN OUR HEARTS ~

“Collage in language-based work can now mean any composition that includes words, phrases, memes sections of outside source material in juxtaposition. An example is T.S. Eliot's “The Waste Land” ...

It includes newspaper clippings, music lyrics, nursery rhymes, and overheard speech, Creative writing ~

“Writing collage is a larger piece of writing consisting of smaller, disconnected bits and pieces of writing rather than one continuous piece. Segments of the collage are typically separated by spaces or asterisks.”

Collage encourages you to experiment (as a child) with a variety of inventive processes. It emphasizes the exploratory, playful quality of writing. It permits you to use your intuition. It is Art, Creative expression.

It is synchronistic, in action, thought, free flowing in the moment, as our inner stream of consciousness ~

No dogma, law, rules as in fine art, it's being authentic, multi-fractal, spirit, magic, essence to act freely.

With modern tools of computer programs/apps we can use ‘Cut and Paste’ to change ideas, concepts.

As with ‘poetry’ lines can be altered, edited at will as brush strokes in painting, or musical notes ~”

“The use of collage, however, did not arise until the 10th century in Japan when calligraphers began to apply glued paper, using texts on surfaces, when writing their poems’ Wikipedia...

‘Juxtaposition was fundamental to the inspiration behind collage: Emphasizing concept & process over end product, collage has brought the incongruous into meaningful congress with the ordinary.

What are the active, conceptual elements of collage (not painting, photomontage, musical, film)?

It is not plagiarism, under the Fair Use Law to develop a narrative using other people's ideas ~ to contrast, critique or support with other expert perception, knowledge and develop an art-work.

Poetical license, which is spontaneous, free-flowing consciousness, creativity, intrinsic intuition ~ which is a definition of ART-LIVE, incorporating, allowing for the immediate magic to appear.

Another brushstroke, shading of colour, ingredient, a new tile in the mosaic, a changing pattern.

Heirloom Seeds Not in the Hidden Hand

"This compilation travels through spectrums of surreal poetry to political reportage. It explores many feelings over 50 years of experiencing life in 'the world, our sense of place'. How our values, opportunities, dreaming, perceptions and living have been engaged, changed, how our vision of ourselves has evolved individually and as a global collective. The development of society, the manifestation, interpretation, inner relationship to the 'matrix' and the effects on Nature and other creatures inhabiting Planet Earth. The modern discoveries have given us new realities, opened up amazing possibilities, concepts of 'multi-dimensional energetic beingness ~ interrelated to Consciousness. We have also realized the dominating power of 'elite' forces whether historical, dynastic conglomerations or a new paradigm of a Mad World Order, cabals dictating through controlling of ideas, propaganda, tyranny, sociopathy, science to super computers wanting to access every entity to regulate our minds, sub-consciousness remotely, automatically without any free choice. The fundamental question of Who am I, where am I from and where am I going, has now never been more crucial to understand. People have become aware on different existential levels due to access of information, and the future of life itself has become critical whereby, 0.1% control 99.9%. Six businessmen have as much wealth as 50% of the poorest inhabitants of the planet and they're intent on preserving and increasing their power and so this immense, disproportionate inequality to an extent where the population of the whole world is becoming enslaved not metaphorically, but in reality, both physically and metaphysically. This writing offers an insight into these 'dualities' which are intrinsic to life today. It also shines a light on Love, art, culture, morality, survival ~ nature, education, democracy, psychopathy, ideology, wisdom, inspirational poetry such as Gibran, Rumi, the truth-tellers fighting the oligarchies, the equal rights activists, Dr Martin Luther King, Julian Assange, and the unknown fighting on behalf of human idealism. New discoveries are opening the quantum fractals of our mind, our hologram code not a predictive simulation to be controlled by some intelligence somewhere tweaking invisible algorithms, our DNA on behalf of their deity, which lives at the World Economic Forum!"

It is central to classical Indian music. Each raga consists of an array of melodic structures

"The War of Terror. Napalm Girl", Nick Ut, 1972. AP. "The children were running out of the Temple.

*"On June 7, Ut heard about fighting in Trảng Bàng.
He photographed the refugees and planes dropping bombs. The civilians were caught in between North Vietnamese soldiers who were trying to take control of the village and South Vietnamese troops who were defending it. One of the planes dropped a napalm bomb on North Vietnamese positions. However, the bomb mistakenly hit Trảng Bàng and civilians.
Kim Phuc and other villagers were hiding in the temple in the village. As the bombs were exploding everywhere the villagers ran out from the temple as they thought it would also be targeted.
Suddenly another plane dropped napalm bombs. People were running out of the location hit by the bomb. Women were carrying burned children. Nick saw terrified children, among them
a naked girl (9-year-old girl, Phan Thị Kim Phúc), running and crying. As he saw her skin falling away he put down his camera and took water for the girl. He picked her up and took her

Exposing The Elite Agenda

'They' are the Ruling Families of the Jesuit Council, a.k.a. Illuminati bloodlines, a.k.a. black nobility, and their lineage goes back to the Zoroastrian bloodlines of Babylon and Mesopotamia. Farnese, Borja (the common image of Jesus is actually a Borja), Colonna, Gaetano (Caetano), Medici, Savelli, Pamphili, Orsini, Aldobrandini/Borghese, Chigi, Breakspeare, Este, Somaglia, Sforza, Massimo, Torlonia, Albani Pallavicini, Este, Barberini, Gonzaga, , and Conti. Some of these surnames have died out due to no male heirs, but the bloodlines still exist and control everything about your life. You NEVER hear about them in mainstream media, you will find very little information about them on the internet, because that's the way they want it. They do not worship God, in fact they have hidden God behind the veil of heliocentrism, big bang theory, and evolution, and there is ZERO evidence of any of those, there are only theories. They've deceived the masses into believing that they are worshipping YHWH, God of the Bible, when, in reality, they are worshipping Baal. Their goals are to fulfill Biblical prophecy, create world economic meltdown (Central Banking System and the Fractional Reserve Banking system which creates money out of thin air which causes the cost of goods to inflate and they own it all), create a fake alien invasion (which is why they needed to create "space") then they will bring out the antichrist disguised as Jesus (who calls himself the Vicar of Christ on Earth.) to save the world and create a New World Order. They have produced over 45 Popes, antipopes and an untold number of Cardinals and Archbishops. They killed JFK, JFK Jr., RFK, MLK, John Lennon, William I of Orange, Anwar Sadat, Franz Ferdinand, among many, many other assassinations including 5 unsuccessful attempts to assassinate Queen Elizabeth I of England, though they did get her foreign minister. They control what is taught in our schools, preached in our churches, mainstream media, what is in the music we love, movies, books, newspapers, magazines, etc. The Jesuits took over the education systems in Europe in the late 1500's, granted by the Vatican. Their Rockefeller Institute dictated what is taught in the U.S. Look up the Tavistock Institute and its influence on modern propaganda. They had Julius Caesar and Pope Gregory XIII change the calendar to make it almost impossible for followers of YHWH to maintain His Sabbath. When you apply the original luni-solar calendar to the Gregorian calendar the Sabbath falls on rotating days of the week every 29/30 days.

They use false flags to start every war, financing both sides, including 9/11. They paid rent for Copernicus, Johannes Kepler, Michelangelo, Leonardo Da Vinci, and Galileo. Newton was President, Darwin and his father were members of the British Royal Society at Jesuit Oxford University. They created the Jesuit Order in 1541. Basically the Roman Empire never went away, they just moved across town to the Vatican.

Constantine had it correct, You cannot control a population by being their leader, but you CAN through RELIGION and using the Inquisitions and crusades to force everyone to convert to your religion.

Under their rule is the Council of 300 which includes criminals like our Presidents and many members of their cabinets as well as high ranking members of the Congress and the Military. That spreads out into high ranking members of the Freemasons, Knights of Columbus, Knights of Malta, Bilderberg Group, Council on Foreign Relations, its European counterpart, European and Asian nobility, and of we cannot forget our old friend Henry Kissinger. They control the Trilateral Commission, which comprises the Vatican who controls the message you hear in church, the Rothschilds control the banking and printing of money from London, the U.S. Military and Intelligence Agencies do the policing from Washington. They are filling our vaccines and spraying our skies (the U.S. government and the U.N. have openly admitted this) with metals such as aluminum, mercury, and barium to suppress our superior mental abilities, to make us sick, and to create as many autistic children as possible who will be the super soldiers of the future (Microsoft and other companies are already hiring specifically autistic employees). They've put Zionist Jews in a position of ownership on paper, to take the blame if their plans get exposed and in return the Zionists get Palestine (Balfour Declaration) which will end up being destroyed anyway in WWII.

"The Israeli Air Force has been conducting an aerial bombardment campaign on the Gaza Strip during the Gaza war. During the bombing, Israeli airstrikes killed thousands of Palestinians (mostly civilians), and damaged or destroyed Palestinian schools, hospitals, mosques, churches, and other civilian infrastructure including refugee camps.^{[2][3]}
By October 2024, Israel said it bombed 40,000 locations^[4] in the Gaza Strip (which is 360 km²).
By one estimate, as of April 2024 the bomb tonnage dropped on Gaza was more than 70,000 tonnes,^[5] surpassing the combined bomb tonnage dropped on Dresden, Hamburg, and London in World War II.^[6]
Satellite imagery showed at least 69% of all buildings were damaged or destroyed,^{[7][8]} which surpasses the scale of destruction in Cologne and Dresden and approaches that of Hamburg during World War II.^{[2][9]}
More than 48,000 Palestinians have been reported killed by the Gaza Health Ministry,^[10] while January 2025 analysis in The Lancet concluded that official figures significantly under-report mortality, estimating 64,260 deaths from traumatic injury up to 30 June 2024, and when extended to October 2024 likely exceeding 70,000. Of this total, the analysis estimated that 59.1% were women, children, elderly.^[11]
Researchers have estimated a civilian death toll of at least 80%.^{[12][13]} Israel faced accusations of war crimes and genocide due to the large number of civilian casualties and large percentage of civilian infrastructure destroyed.^{[14][15]} Israel ordered civilians evacuate, threatening that civilians who didn't evacuate would be considered "an accomplice in a terrorist organisation".^{[16][17][a]} Israel stated that its struck targets were used by Hamas, but an Airwars analysis did not find evidence of militant presence in most Israeli airstrikes during Oct 2023.^[19] The United Nations reports that 86% of the Gaza Strip is under Israeli evacuation orders.^[20] Satellite data analysis indicates that 80% of the buildings in northern Gaza have been damaged or destroyed.^{[21][7][b][c]} Wikipedia

"In Ref. to matter, we were wrong all the time. What we called matter is energy whose vibration has been lowered to the point that it has become perceived by the sense organs. Matter is spirit reduced to a point of visibility. There is no such thing as matter" "Time and space are not the conditions in which we live, but the ways in which we think. Physical concepts are free creations of human reason and are not conditioned, however they may seem, by the external world" "Time does not exist - we invented it.

Time is what the clock shows. The distinction between past, present and future is merely a stubbornly recurring illusion." "I think 99 times and find nothing. I stop thinking, swim in silence, and the truth comes to me." "Intellect can do little on the way to discovery. There is a leap in consciousness, call it intuition or whatever you want, and the solution comes to you, and you don't know how or why."

"Man perceives himself, his thoughts and feelings as something separate from everything else, a kind of optical illusion of consciousness. This deception is a kind of prison for us, limiting us to personal desires and attachment to a few close to us. Our task is to free ourselves from this prison, extending the circle of our compassion to embrace all living beings and all nature in its beauty." "Our uniqueness from each other is an optical illusion." "When something vibrates, the electrons of the entire Universe resonate with it. Everything is connected. The greatest tragedy of human existence is the illusion of seclusion."

"Reality is merely an illusion, although it is very durable." We are souls clothed in sacred biochemical garments, and our bodies are the instruments by which our souls play their music."

"When you study the lives of the most influential men who have ever walked among us, you discover a single thread that runs through them all. First of all, they were in tune with their spiritual nature and only then with their physical self" "The true value of a person can be found in the degree to which he has achieved liberation from self." "The ancients knew something we seem to have forgotten.

The more I know about physics, the more I am drawn to metaphysics." "During my long life, I understood one thing: all our science, compared to reality, is primitive and childish. We do not know a thousand percent of what nature has revealed to us. It is quite possible that behind the perception of our sensory #organs there are hidden worlds, which we are not even aware of." "I am not an atheist. The problem at hand is too extensive for our limited mind. We are in the position of a small child who enters a huge library filled with books in many languages. The child knows that someone had to write these books." "The common idea that I am an atheist is based on a big mistake. Whoever interprets my scientific theories in this way did not understand them." "Everything is predetermined, every beginning and end, by forces over which we have no control. It is destined for both the insect and the star. People, vegetables or space dust - we all dance to a mysterious tune played by an invisible bagpipe in the distance" "The religion of the future will be the religion of space. It will surpass personal God and will do without dogma and theology." "Energy cannot be created or destroyed, it can only be transferred from one form to another." "Everything is energy, and that is all that there is. Tune into the frequency of the reality ~ that you want, and you will not be able but to find that reality. It can't be any other way. This is not a philosophy. This is physics." "I am happy because I do not want anything from anyone. I don't care about money. Decorations, titles or distinctions mean nothing to me. I'm not hungry for praise. I have no need for anything. A happy person is so satisfied with the present that he does not worry too much about the future."

CONCIOUSLY DOPTSRsone44e90al0uf8 c tMy8t8s99i 5t692er7ag6dA.ut101Y0i93t ·

In a world where shortcuts and self interest often masquerade as success, living with a clear conscience is a quiet rebellion. It's not the easiest choice, but it's the one that offers true freedom.

A clear conscience isn't just about avoiding guilt; it's about creating a life built on honesty, integrity, and respect. It's about aligning your actions with your values and knowing that no matter what challenges arise, you've acted with authenticity and kindness. This inner harmony allows you to face life's uncertainties with strength and to savour its joys without distraction. When your conscience is clear, you unburden yourself from the weight of deceit or unresolved conflict. You no longer have to weave complex stories to mask dishonesty or fear the consequences of manipulation.

Instead, you create space for clarity, purpose, and connection. Living authentically sharpens your focus on the beauty of the world around you, enabling you to see life's imperfections not as flaws

but as opportunities for growth and understanding.

The way you treat others mirrors the person you are becoming. Choosing kindness and fairness in your relationships not only enriches others' lives but also strengthens your own. Taking advantage of others might seem like a shortcut to success, but it always comes at a cost, both to your inner peace and to the trust others place in you. The energy you put into the world has a way of returning to you, and living with integrity ensures that what comes back is peace, not chaos.

Integrity also nurtures deeper relationships. When you're honest and consistent, people feel safe with you.

They know your words align with your actions, and this trust becomes the foundation of meaningful connections. It's through these bonds, built on mutual respect and understanding, that you find a sense of purpose and belonging. A clear conscience not only strengthens your sense of self but also inspires others to live authentically. This doesn't mean striving for perfection ~ it means striving for authenticity.

It's about owning your mistakes, taking responsibility, and committing to learning from them.

By doing so, you build resilience, deepen trust, and grow into the person you want to be. Accountability isn't a burden; it's an opportunity to demonstrate strength and character.

Living with a clear conscience opens the door to a richer, more intentional life. You start to notice the small joys—a kind gesture, the warmth of sunlight, the beauty of a quiet moment—because you're no longer distracted by guilt or fear. Each day becomes an opportunity to align your actions with your values, to honour your commitments, and to leave a positive mark on the world. Ultimately, living with a clear conscience is about choosing peace over convenience, authenticity over appearances, and integrity over shortcuts. It's not always easy, but it's always worth it. When you live this way, you find yourself not just existing but thriving, grounded in the knowledge that you've stayed true to who you are. This is the foundation of a meaningful, fulfilling life ~ a life lived with intention, courage, and grace."

"23 March 1944, the most significant attack on Nazi occupation forces by the Italian partisan resistance took place on Via Rasella in Rome. Around a dozen members of the communist-led partisan Patriotic Action Group (GAP) attacked an SS company of over 150 ethnic Germans, which was tasked with fighting the resistance. The partisans detonated a home-made bomb then opened fire with hand-thrown mortar bombs, hand grenades and guns before vanishing. The resistance unit suffered no casualties, while over 30 SS members were killed and over 100 wounded. Unable to capture those responsible, the following day the enraged Nazis massacred 335 people, some of whom had been arrested for resistance activities but most of whom were unrelated civilians."

What it Means to Be a Self-Entitled, Self Righteous Person

"A self-entitled person is someone who believes they deserve certain privileges or advantages without having earned them. This sense of entitlement can manifest in various ways, such as expecting special treatment, feeling entitled to others' time and attention, or believing that rules and norms do not apply to them. The psychology behind entitlement is complex and can be influenced by a variety of factors, including upbringing, personality traits, and societal norms. For example, children who are consistently given everything they want without having to work for it may develop a sense of entitlement as they grow older. Similarly, individuals with certain personality disorders, such as narcissistic personality-disorder, may exhibit entitlement as a core characteristic.

It is important to note that not all entitlement is negative or harmful. For example, individuals who have worked hard and achieved success may feel entitled to enjoy the fruits of their labour.

However, when entitlement becomes excessive or unreasonable, it can lead to negative consequences, both for the entitled individual and those around them.

To better understand entitlement, it can be helpful to identify common behaviours and attitudes associated with it. These may include:

Believing that rules and norms do not apply to them

Expecting others to cater to their needs and desires

Feeling entitled to special treatment or privileges

Becoming angry or resentful when they do not get what they feel they deserve

Taking credit for others' work or accomplishments

Blaming others for their failures or shortcomings

By recognizing these behaviours and attitudes, individuals can begin to identify and address their own sense of entitlement, as well as recognize it in others.” ~ ‘Respect, Truth, Peace, Love’.

“On 13 April 1919, the Jallianwala Bagh massacre took place in Amritsar, India, when British troops opened fire on a crowd of predominantly Sikh pilgrims, murdering up to 1,000 or more people and injuring more. As well as pilgrims, there were large numbers of Muslims and Hindus, many of whom were farmers, traders and merchants attending a horse and cattle fair. The youngest victim was just six weeks old. The killings were not reported in Britain until December that year, and no one charged with any offence. The incident sparked widespread outrage and led to the non-cooperation movement, which began the following year. In 1940, an Indian independence activist who was wounded in the massacre, Udham Singh, assassinated the Lieutenant Governor who was responsible, he was subsequently executed”

Agape ~ the most expansive, transcendent love the soul can hold. It is not driven by desire, condition, or transaction. It asks for nothing in return, and yet it gives everything. This is not the love that flares fast and burns out. It is the eternal flame, the quiet, unwavering presence of love that simply is, regardless of circumstance, response, or recognition.

Agape doesn't bind. It doesn't possess. It doesn't perform. It flows freely from the depths of a heart that knows its own infinite source. It sees the divine in others ~ even when they cannot see it in themselves. It forgives without keeping score. It honours without demanding praise. It embraces without needing to be held back. It is love without walls, without ego, without end.

This is the love that holds space in the storm. The love that walks beside grief without trying to fix it.

The love that celebrates others' light without dimming its own. Agape is not blind ~ it sees everything and still chooses compassion. Still chooses presence. Still chooses grace.

To embody Agape is to recognize that love is not something we earn ~ it's something we are.

It's what we return to when all the armor falls away. It's what remains when expectations dissolve, and all that's left is the raw, holy connection between souls. No conditions. No contracts. Just truth.

Agape exists in the mother who keeps showing up for a child lost in pain. In the friend who stays through the silence. In the stranger who extends kindness with no agenda. In the healer who holds another's suffering as if it were their own. It's found in the quiet sacrifices, the silent prayers, the open hands that never close. But perhaps most powerfully, Agape begins within.

When you learn to love yourself ~ not just the polished parts, but the parts you hide, the parts you judge, the parts that feel unworthy ~ something miraculous begins to happen. You become a vessel for love that doesn't run dry. A light that doesn't flicker based on who's watching. A presence that doesn't shrink when it's not reciprocated. To live in Agape is to be a safe place in a fractured world. A reminder that love can be unconditional, not just in theory, but in action. It's not about being perfect ~ it's about being real. And in that realness, love becomes limitless. When was the last time you offered love without condition, not because someone deserved it, but because your soul knew they needed it?"

17 April 1975, the Communist Party of Kampuchea (aka the Khmer Rouge) seized power in Cambodia after overthrowing the corrupt military dictatorship of Lon Nol, which was backed by Western powers.

Support for the Party had increased dramatically amid a massive campaign of bombing by the US, during which around 500,000 tons of bombs were dropped on the country, killing 150,000 people.

The Khmer Rouge then forcibly evacuated the cities, attempting to create an agrarian society to produce rice to sell on the world market to fund industrialisation. They turned the country into what resembled a labour camp, with uniform clothing for everyone, widespread malnutrition, and an atmosphere of paranoia and coercion. They launched a brutal genocide, in which up to 500,000 Cham Muslim people were exterminated. Ethnic Chinese, Thai and Vietnamese people were persecuted, as were Christians and Buddhists. Others designated as intellectuals were murdered, along with their families, this included doctors, teachers, lawyers, scientists, engineers, professionals, people speaking a second language, even people who wore glasses. Having exterminated experts, the government was unable to irrigate crops or manage agriculture effectively, and the healthcare system collapsed. Hundreds of thousands of people were killed by famines and disease. In total, the Khmer Rouge were responsible for the deaths of approximately

2 million people, around a quarter of the total population, until they were eventually toppled following an invasion by Vietnam. The US, UK and China then began to funnel military aid to the Khmer Rouge, enabling them to continue their reign of terror in areas they still controlled. The US sent them $85 million in arms and aid, while Margaret Thatcher's government in the UK sent SAS special forces troops to help train their fighters. In 1992, the United Nations handed control of around one quarter of Cambodia back to the Khmer Rouge." <https://stories.workingclasshistory.com/.../khmer-rouge...>

“France gathered 400 Muslim scholars and beheaded them with machetes; During its occupation of Chad in 1917, when France entered the Algerian city of Laghouat in 1852, it exterminated two-thirds of its population by burning them to death in a single night. France conducted 17 nuclear tests in Algeria between 1960 and 1966, resulting in an unknown number of casualties ranging between 27,000 and 100,000. The effects are still felt today. When France withdrew from

in 1962, it had already planted a seed behind it. There were more mines than the entire population of Algeria at the time, 11 million mines. France occupied Algeria for 132 years. The French exterminated one million Muslims in the first seven years after their arrival, and another million and a half in the last seven years before their departure. French historian Jacques Gorky estimated that the total number of people killed by France in Algeria, from its arrival in 1830 until its departure in 1962, was 10 million. France occupied Tunisia for 75 years, Algeria for 132 years, Morocco for 44 years, and Mauritania for 60 years. When France entered Egypt in its famous campaign, French soldiers entered mosques on their horses and raped free women in front of their families. They drank alcohol in mosques and converted a number of mosques into stables for their horses. Finally, they say Islam is a religion of terrorism and our Prophet is the prophet of terrorism. It's amazing to see people boast about France's civilization and even defend it, forgetting its dark history." (Bienvenue a la Crimea!)

"Ayn Rand made a striking and unsettling prediction about the state of society, saying, "When you notice that in order to produce, you must obtain permission from those who produce nothing, when you see that money flows to those who deal not in goods but in favours; when you realize that many get rich through bribery and influence rather than through work, and that the laws no longer protect you against them, but instead, they are protected from you; when you discover that corruption is rewarded and honesty becomes a form of self-sacrifice, then you can confidently say, without fear of being wrong, that your society is doomed." These words reflect Rand's deep concerns about the direction of society, where corruption and manipulation of power undermine true merit and values of hard work and integrity."

Altruism not Absolutism. WHO Invented This Total Nonsense and then Enforced its Power Totally?

"Divine right of kings, in European history, a political doctrine in defense of monarchical absolutism, which asserted that kings derived their authority from God and could not therefore be held accountable for their actions by any earthly authority such as a parliament. Originating in Europe, the divine-right theory can be traced to the medieval conception of God's award of temporal power to the political ruler, paralleling the award of spiritual power to the church. By the 16th and 17th centuries, however, the new national monarchs were asserting their authority in matters of both church and state. King James I of England (reigned 1603–25) was the foremost exponent of the divine right of kings, but the doctrine virtually disappeared from English politics after the Glorious Revolution (1688–89). In the late 17th and 18th centuries, kings such as Louis XIV (1643–1715) of France continued to profit from the divine-right theory, even though many of them no longer had any truly religious belief in it. The American Revolution (1775-83), the French Revolution (1789), and the Napoleonic Wars deprived the doctrine of most of its remaining credibility." Britannica. In a world awash with comforting facades and meticulously curated realities, there exists a solitary soul,

Spiritual Outsider. This wo/man refuses to accept the sanitized version of existence that bourgeois society peddles, where the seen and tangible are hastily enshrined as immutable truth. While the masses find solace in the illusions of order and harmony, the Outsider peers deeply into the hidden realms of being, unearthing the raw, pulsating energy of chaos and transformation that lies beneath the surface.

Beyond the Material Veil.

The Outsider does not conform to conventional notions of reality. Instead, he delves into the spiritual substrata of existence, perceiving layers of energy and vibration that many dare not acknowledge.

His vision pierces through the comforting mirage of everyday life, revealing a tumultuous undercurrent of cosmic dissonance, a sacred chaos that both destabilizes and invigorates the spirit.

"He sees too deep and too much," they whisper, for his insight is unclouded by the complacency of superficial living.

Embracing the Hidden Truths. In his relentless quest for authenticity, the Spiritual Outsider becomes estranged from a civilization ensnared by its own illusions. The majority dwell within the confines of self-imposed boundaries, blissfully unaware or unwilling to perceive the deeper malaise that undermines their existence. Meanwhile, the Outsider carries a luminous yet heavy awareness ~ a consciousness of the spiritual decay hidden beneath society's pristine veneer. This profound clarity, though isolating, is his sacred burden and his ultimate gift.

The Paradox of Isolation and Enlightenment

Within his solitude lies a paradoxical strength. The very ability to see beyond the mundane, to embrace the disordered dance of creation, is both a curse and a divine boon. It alienates him from a world content with ignorance, yet it enriches him with rare, esoteric wisdom. His perspective challenges not only his own inner truth but also beckons others to question the comfortable narratives that have long masked the deeper mysteries of life. The Spiritual Outsider invites us to confront our illusions and step into the vast, often disordered, expanse of authentic awareness.

A Call to Spiritual Awakening

Living with such profound insight is to walk the path of spiritual awakening ~ a journey marked by the willingness to perceive the unseen, to feel the unspoken, and to know the uncharted. His existence is a constant reminder that the allure of accepted reality comes at a high spiritual cost ~ a cost paid in the currency of deep insight and the loneliness of being truly awake. Yet, in this awakening lies the power to transform, to transmute the chaos into a higher order of understanding, and to live in communion with the boundless mystery of the universe. The Spiritual Outsider stands as both a cautionary tale and a luminous guidepost: a warning of the perils of spiritual complacency and an invitation to rise above the veil, to question the conventional, and to embrace the transformative beauty of life's intricate, chaotic dance.

“Cunt: It’s a pretty powerful word, but maybe not for the reasons you might think. For those of you who saw The Vagina Monologues, cunt is a word that’s being reclaimed by a lot of people who are tired of a word that is historically associated with female power being twisted into something shameful and derogatory. Contrary to what you might think, cunt doesn’t just mean “Vagina” though. There’s a rich history to the word that would make all those people who’ve ever used it as a putdown blush if they knew what it really meant. Etymologically, cunt is most often connected with the oriental goddess Cunti and/or the Hindu goddess Kunda (also known as Shakti). Cunti and Kunda are revered in their respective religions as the Great Yoni of the Universe (Yoni means “the source of all life”). The goddess Kundalini Shakti in Hinduism is the embodiment of Sanskrit word “Shak” (“to be able”) and personifies force, empowerment, the divine feminine creative power and, most significantly, she depends on no one; she is instead inter-dependent with the universe (that’s right, the universe couldn’t exist without her either!). Cunt is also related etymologically to words like country, kin, kind, cunning, and ken (meaning knowledge, wisdom, remembrance, and insight). It’s also cognate with “cunabula,” meaning cradle, “Cunina” a Roman goddess who protected children in the cradle, and “cuntipotent,” which refers to a person who possesses all-powerful cunt magic. For a word so strongly linked to feminine agency, creativity, creation and strength, why do people tiptoe around cunt? Why are we so afraid to say it? Why do we refer to people we dislike as beautiful, powerful goddesses? The short answer: Patriarchy. The long answer: As the Christian/Catholic church started to inhabit formerly pagan areas and convert the native dwellers, they decreed that all likenesses of these goddesses were profane, and that the only true God was a man. They told people that feminine power was a manifestation of the devil, and that the yonic images were likenesses of the cunnus diaboli (Latin for “devilish cunt”). The divinity of the cunt was something to be hidden and ashamed of. Geoffrey Chaucer even used cunt in a fairly anatomical sense, but over time, the word was revived into a zombified version of its original meaning. Cunt as used today is distinctly un-holy, ugly, unspeakable.*

Those who do speak it are ignorant of the divine, creative connotations and foolishly use it in an attempt to steal power from others to try to give the impression of their own strength. Even if cunt simply meant vagina, what's wrong with vaginas? Vaginas are amazing, awesome! They give people pleasure, they give life, and they're even a naturally evolved lunar calendar! Why would you refer to an angry, disagreeable person as a warm, natural birth canal? As someone who loves words, the misuse of cunt is utterly baffling. Sure, language evolves over time, but as responsible, aware citizens, we need to work against constructs that steal power from one group and give it to another. It can be a massive force of love instead of a massive force of hate if we actively define our vocabulary instead of letting it define us."

In 1847, the Choctaw Nation - still recovering from being forcibly removed from their ancestral lands heard about Ireland's devastating potato famine. Despite their own poverty and suffering after the Trail of Tears, they gathered $170 (about $5,000 today) to send food and supplies to the starving Irish people. 173 years later, when COVID-19 hit Native American communities hard in 2020, the Irish people remembered that historic act of kindness. In a powerful display of gratitude, over 20,000 Irish donors contributed $670,000 to support the Navajo and Hopi Nations during the pandemic crisis. Ireland had already honored the Choctaw's 1847 generosity by creating the "Kindred Spirits" sculpture in Cork and establishing scholarships for Choctaw youth. But the Irish people's overwhelming response during COVID-19 showed how a single act of compassion can echo across generations and inspire others to help those in need." "On 27 March 1943, gay anti-fascist resistance fighter Willem Arondeus led a group in bombing the Amsterdam Public Records Office which the Nazis had used to identify Jewish people and verify documents. At around 10:15 PM, the group of around 10 people wearing police uniforms overpowered guards, sedated them and dragged them to the garden. Five explosions were then heard and the building was set ablaze. Firefighters then deliberately waited a long time before attempting to put out the fire, and when doing so they used large amounts of water, presumably in order to damage more papers. The attack destroyed thousands of files which could be used to check if documents forged by the resistance were genuine or not. Within a week, Arondeus and the other members of the group were arrested. One of the participants, Frieda Belinfante, a musician and lesbian, managed to evade capture. Twelve, including Arondeus, were executed that July by firing squad. In his last message before his execution, Arondeus said, "Let it be known that homosexuals are not cowards."

“Psychedelic drugs have long been exiled to the fringes of medicine, dismissed as recreational drugs with limited therapeutic potential. That all changed with the breakthrough therapy status granted last year to psilocybin, the active compound found in psychedelic mushrooms, for its ability to rapidly reverse treatment-resistant depression. This has led to an explosion of interest in the field, with new institutes opening and new disorders identified as targets for psychedelic therapy. In our latest interview series, we discuss the potential of psychedelics to revolutionize clinical neuroscience with thought leaders in the field.

Professor David Nutt, Edmond J. Safra Professor of Neuropsychopharmacology at Imperial College, London, has never been afraid to stick his head above the parapet on the topic of drugs. His repeated calling-out of the failures of contemporary drug policy has seen him butt heads with academics and politicians alike. But there are signs that opinions about the use of drugs in science and society are tilting at last. The opening of Imperial’s Centre for Psychedelic Research, where Nutt is Deputy Head, was one clear indication that the wider field is becoming more open to the therapeutic potential of psychedelics.

In this interview with Professor Nutt, we discuss pot, policy and the potential of psilocybin. Ruairi

Mackenzie (RM): Two major new centres for psychedelic research, at Imperial and Johns Hopkins, have been established in the last year. How significant are these developments for psychedelic research?

David Nutt (DN): I think it’s great that there are centres being set up in academic institutions, that’s why we set ours up. The main thing about them is the fact that they’ve been set up in two of the top medical research institutes in the world essentially says that psychedelic research is now accepted as a major branch of medicine, particularly in psychiatry and neuroscience. That’s why they’re so important.

RM: Another recreational drug that has become more widespread in research is cannabis, but the science of cannabis seems less established than the recreational cannabis industry, which has taken off in the US. you think that the acceptance of a drug in clinical and recreational use are linked inextricably or are they separate issues?

DN: Well I think the point to make – I think this is a fundamental point, the most important thing I'm going to tell you – is that our research on the neuroscience of psychedelics was the reason we then moved into the clinic, because our first studies on psilocybin, using fMRI imaging, showed surprising, unexpected brain effects which were predictive, we thought, of it being antidepressant. This antidepressant trial, funded by the MRC, that we conducted was predicated on the neuroscience. It was translational science.

The brain changed in the same way as it changes with frequency of depression, so we tried it in depression.

It's forward translational science. That's completely different from cannabis, where that drug has been widely used therapeutically and eventually the medical profession was dragged screaming and protesting to use it. I believe that our science of psychedelics, particularly psilocybin, has been the driver for us doing it, but it's also given other people the confidence to move it to the clinic because it is no longer just based on self-report from anecdotes of people using mushrooms in their living room.

RM: The studies involved in using psychedelics are very different from casual use and generally their safety seems to require a controlled environment in which they can be taken therapeutically. Is there a way to make these drugs safe to take outside that environment?

DN: One of the reasons we were allowed to do the psilocybin depression study was that I persuaded the MHRA that psilocybin was a very safe drug, because we know about a million young people in Britain a year use mushrooms and there's very little harm. I have no worries about people using it recreationally, but I do have worries about depressed people using it recreationally because we have found that the effects of psilocybin in depression are usually very difficult, painful and challenging and I would not have been comfortable with people self-medicating in the middle of a mountain in Wales with mushrooms if they go through the kind of trips that our depressed patients went through. If you're using these for medicine, you need to have appropriate psychotherapy and medical cover. If you're using them for recreation, well as long as you're aware of the risks and you're not suffering from major mental illness, they're probably relatively safe.

RM: With the treatment of mental health disorders, it seems unlikely we'll find some kind of cure-all.

Which indications are psychedelics most promising for?DN: Pretty much all the trials have been done with psilocybin and the areas of clear efficacy are depression – that's our trial – smoking cessation – that was the Matt Johnson [a Professor at Johns Hopkins] trial and alcoholism, that's the Michael Bogenschutz [of NYU] trial. There are also two rather beautiful studies that were blinded studies done in anxiety and depression in people who are facing end of life stress, done by Johns Hopkins and by

New York University. Those are the best indications we have at present. There's also been one rather nice ayahuasca study. Ayahuasca is a preparation of [the psychedelic] DMT. It's usually used in Latin America, so with ayahuasca, there's been a Brazilian study showing that Ayahuasca can work in depression. What links depression, tobacco, smoking and alcoholism, we believed – this is our theory – that in these three indications people's brain gets locked into a way of thinking from which it is hard to disengage. Smokers crave cigarettes; they think about cigarettes enormously when they're trying to stop, or when they have stopped. Alcoholics crave alcohol; their brain is consumed thinking about alcohol and depressed people's brains are consumed by depressive ruminations.

The common factor in those three disorders is the Inability of the brain to disengage from maladaptive brain processes. What psychedelics do in the actual trip itself is have a powerful disrupting effect on brain circuits which underpin those repetitive processes. It's that disruption that allows people to escape from disorder. Our belief is that any disorder that is accompanied by what you might called locked-in overthinking, could respond. That could also include other forms of addiction, like heroin addiction.

We're teeing up to do a heroin study soon, but also OCD, where people are over engaged in avoidance and fear of responding, avoiding the fearful consequences.

I do not believe psychedelics will be helpful in disorders such as ADHD or schizophrenia or bipolardisorder, but they will be I think useful with disorders that are internalizing disorders.

Disorders

where people get locked into an internal mindset from which they can't escape. We're also setting up to do a trial in anorexia where people have an excessive preoccupation with body image.

RM: Are there any myths around these drugs that you'd like to disperse?

DN: Yes! The first is the continual lying about the fact that these are addictive. The United Nations say they're addictive, the FDA say they're addictive, the Misuse of Drugs Act says they're harmful and addictive. These drugs are anti-addictive. They do not cause addiction. One of the reasons they are banned is because people said they were addictive when they're not; they treat addiction. They don't cause addiction. The reason they don't cause addiction is partly because they treat addiction and partly because they produce a very rapid tolerance or desensitization and that occurs so fast that people stop using. There's a very nice study the US military did, where on the third day the effects wore off. It is one of the reasons they don't use it in warfare because they realized the Russians could pre-treat their people to develop tolerance for a couple of days. They don't cause dependence; they don't cause addiction.

The other myth is they make you crazy. They don't make you crazy. They might make people who have a propensity to be psychotic more psychotic, but they don't produce enduring changes in people, negative changes in people's mental state. If anything they tend to produce enduring positive changes in people.

The third myth of course is that they're very dangerous but as far as I can see there's almost no deaths from these drugs ever in the history of the world, except from misadventure and of course it is definitely not wise to be taking a psychedelic when you're sitting on the cliffs in Dover, like a couple of kids did a few years ago at Beachy Head. It's very silly to go to a place where you are at risk if you're tripping.

In hospital settings, controlled settings, recreationally these drugs have a low propensity to cause harm.

RM: Psychedelic drugs were very much made out to be dangerous in the 1970s and 1980s, which has hindered research. Is this kind of demonization driven by policy makers or can science play a role now in making sure those same mistakes aren't repeated?

DN: The demonization was all political, it all goes back to the Vietnam War, to the fact that young men didn't want to fight in a war in a place they'd never heard and didn't want to fight against an enemy they'd never seen for a cause they didn't understand and they refused to fight. They went to San Francisco, they listened to the Grateful Dead, they took acid and they started the anti-war movement. LSD is the only drug that has ever been banned because it changed the way people voted! In those days, you couldn't ban a drug just because people were using it, you had to find harm. The hysteria about the harms of psychedelics was all created by the drug enforcement agency and the CIA that justified banning it. Once LSD was banned as is almost always the case, they tried to ban every other drug which might be used instead of it. They banned psilocybin, they banned DMT etc. The banning of these drugs is a political act and it was opposed by many scientists at the time.

RM: Will the establishment of large centers like the ones at Imperial and Hopkins stop scientists being ignored again?

DN: It's a great question. I think you need to ask scientists that, they don't usually tell me the truth.

If they like what I do they say it's great, but if they don't, they rarely confront me because I'm quite combative! I don't know what proportion of scientists are on board with [the centers] but a surprising number of very senior people, professors from top institutions around the world have come up to me, by themselves, shaken my hand and said thanks for doing this, we couldn't do it, you can, thank you.

There's a huge stigma against these drugs. Here's a true story. I wrote a definitive paper on how the regulations, the scheduling of these drugs destroyed research. I wrote in Nature Reviews Neuroscience, about 5 years ago. The journal contracted it and said, condition was I had to get an American author.

I rang up a friend of mine who works in this field in America and I said, great news, we're going to be contracted to write a Nature Reviews Neuroscience paper on how the drug laws impede research and they said, "Oh thanks David, but if I put my name to this paper I will never get a grant from the NIH, so I can't do it. If I do this, they will believe that I'm fighting them, and they won't fund my research."

Of course, they're not funding psychedelic research anyway, but they wouldn't fund the other research this person was doing. In the end I had to find an American, I found Dave Nichols, even older than me, who was prepared to. He was past getting grants and he was prepared to write it with me. The pressure from NIDA (National Institute on Drug Abuse) and the NIAAA (National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism) and the NIMH (National Institute on Mental Health) on scientists in America to comply with the status quo, which is that these are dangerous illegal drugs, is stopping research.

RM: A final question on another big story – the licensing of esketamine to treat depression – what is your take on these findings?

DN: It's very exciting. What you need to know about esketamine is it probably works in the same way initially as psilocybin. It disrupts repetitive thinking in depression. It produces similar disorganization of brain connectivity as you get with psilocybin but the esketamine effect doesn't last very long. It only lasts two or three days. You have to take it twice a week. The [therapeutic] effects of psilocybin, they last for weeks, months or years, not in everyone but in some people. The reason is that 5-HT_{2A} receptor which is the target of psilocybin is the receptor which allows you to think differently. Esketamine basically causes a disruption of brain functioning, but it doesn't activate the recovery process whereas psilocybin does.

RM: Do you think the same designation that's been given to esketamine will be given to psilocybin based on these more enduring results?

DN: I hope so. There is another fundamental difference. The esketamine is given to people who have not fully responded to an SSRI, but you cannot use psilocybin in those people because SSRIs block the effect of psilocybin. The methodology for the psilocybin trial is that you've got to get people off the SSRIs, which is quite difficult sometimes. Esketamine is a sort of top-up, where psilocybin is a different, more powerful medication which you have to have people free of other medication to be able to use it. They will be used in quite different populations, I think." By Ruairi J Mackenzie

"On 9 April 1948, the Deir Yassin massacre took place when around 120 fighters from the Zionist paramilitary groups Irgun and Lehi attacked the Palestinian village of Deir Yassin near Jerusalem, in which most of the residents were stonecutters and quarry workers (content note:

sexual violence). From 100 to 150 or more Palestinians, including many women and children, were killed, among them people who had been decapitated, disembowelled, mutilated, and raped.

One Zionist militiaman, Yehuda Feder, described his part in the massacre:

"I killed an armed Arab man and two Arab girls of 16 or 17 who were helping the Arab who was shooting. I stood them against a wall and blasted them with two rounds from the Tommy gun".

He also recounted looting from the Palestinians' homes: "a lot of money and silver and gold jewellery fell into our hands" and described the massacre as a "tremendous operation".

Other Israelis later reported witnessing other atrocities like an elderly couple shot in the back, and one man tied to a tree and set on fire. Dozens of bodies were then piled up and burned. Mordechai Gichon, a Zionist intelligence officer described the aftermath as looking “like a pogrom, when Cossacks burst into Jewish neighbourhoods, then it would have looked something like this.” The incident led to many Palestinians fleeing in terror and was a key event in the ethnic cleansing of the area, during which over 700,000 of the 900,000 Palestinian Arab residents of what became Israel were expelled or forced to flee from their homes. The Israeli army, which incorporated Irgun, today still refuses to release its photographs and documentation of the massacre.”

"In ancient Sparta, mothers were known for a chilling farewell to their warrior sons:
"Return with your shield - or on it." The shield, weighing 30 pounds, was essential to the Spartan phalanx formation. Dropping it to flee wasn't just cowardice - it endangered the entire battle line.

A lost shield meant exile or death. Spartan warriors who fled battle were called

"tremblers" and became

social outcasts. No Spartan woman would marry them. Even their own mothers would disown them.

The shield farewell captured the essence of Spartan values - victory or death were the only acceptable outcomes. Spartans were buried where they fell in battle, often far from home. The saying wasn't just about carrying the heavy bronze shield but about carrying the weight of Spartan honor."

These Pirates began to get into fights with Hitler Youth patrols and when the war started, they conducted sabotage, slacked at work and began to help Jewish people, deserters and POWs. "Less than a month ago, he had won the Oscars with a masterpiece film about Palestinian resistance. A few hours ago, Palestinian filmmaker Handam Ballal, co-author of "No Other Land," was injured, kidnapped and taken away blindfolded by a commando of Israeli settlers during an assault in the West Bank. His colleagues speak of a real lynching, with bleeding wounds on his head and stomach, without anyone knowing where he is and in what condition. We are facing a criminal act and a real settlement against an artist and a free man who bravely told what is happening in Gaza. This is how the person who dares to show the world the truth ends up. He is only one and the most famous - and hopefully still alive - of the hundreds of thousands of Palestinians who have been victimized or injured by a real genocide going on, in general silence. If 50,000 killed children, women and civilians are not enough, at least what happened at an Oscar will open the eyes of the world."

If all our relatives who crawl and swim and live within the earth were taken away, there could be no life."

"Happy Bicycle Day! On April 19, 1943: Swiss chemist Albert Hofmann intentionally ingested 250 micrograms of LSD, a substance he synthesized years earlier derived from ergot fungus. This followed an accidental exposure three days prior, where he absorbed some through his skin and experienced dizziness and vivid imagination. The deliberate ingestion revealed LSD's powerful hallucinogenic effects, an experience Hofmann chose to repeat. This day is now known as "Bicycle Day", because he began to feel the effects of the drug as he rode home on a bike because of wartime restrictions on automobile use. This was the first intentional LSD trip. Hofmann continued to take small doses of LSD throughout much of his life and always hoped to find a use for it. In his memoir, he emphasized it as a "sacred drug": "I see the true importance of LSD in the possibility of providing material aid to meditation aimed at the mystical experience of a deeper, comprehensive reality." Albert Hofmann passed away at the age of 102 in 2008. Two years earlier, when he celebrated his 100th birthday in Basel at a LSD conference, he announced that he dropped acid for the last time at the age of 97. "A hundred years would not suffice to describe the fullness of experience contained in a single minute."

"It gave me an inner joy, an open mindedness, a gratefulness, open eyes and an internal sensitivity for the miracles of creation. I think in human evolution it has never been as necessary to have this substance LSD.

It is just a tool to turn us into what we are supposed to be." Albert Hofmann speech on his 100th birthday ~

The Fertile Crescent in 7500 BC

"Around 7500 BC, the Fertile Crescent spanning modern-day Syria, Lebanon, Israel, Palestine, Jordan, Iraq, and southeastern Turkey was a hotspot of early human innovation. Here, people began transitioning from nomadic lifestyles to settled farming communities. Villages emerged with organized agriculture, cultivating wheat, barley, lentils, domesticating sheep, goats, and cattle. This period marks the heart of the Neolithic Revolution, where humans first controlled food production, enabling population growth and the rise of complex societies. The Fertile Crescent became the foundation of civilization itself."

The current administration has updated a page on the White House website that argues the lab leak theory as the most likely origin of COVID-19, citing a range of claims regarding scientific data, NIH oversight failures, and alleged suppression of dissenting views. The page argues that: COVID-19 likely originated from a lab-related incident involving gain-of-function research in Wuhan, China.

Public health officials, including Dr. Anthony Fauci promoted a natural-origin narrative to suppress the lab-leak hypothesis. U.S. taxpayer money was misused via EcoHealth Alliance to fund high-risk research. Federal agencies, including HHS, NIH, allegedly obstructed investigations and mishandled pandemic response and oversight. Some agencies (like the FBI and Department of Energy) have also supported the lab-leak theory in recent years, acknowledging uncertainty in their position on the matter; others confidently still support the natural origins hypothesis even with its unlikely reality.

A story from us here at CE, we recall getting information from inside the intelligence community way back in early March before COVID became a huge "thing" and anyone was even speaking about lab leaks. We were told from a trusted source that this virus was from a lab, it would spread fast but not be all that deadly unless people were vulnerable. The source did not know if it was intentionally leaked but that there were more deadly versions of the virus at the lab." See COVID.GOV April 2025

"#In 1767, a devastating smallpox outbreak claimed the life of Empress Maria Theresa's beloved daughter. Refusing to succumb to despair, she took a bold step that would save countless lives and transform medicine forever. Against her physician's advice, Maria Theresa tested smallpox inoculation on 101 orphans. After proving its safety, she inoculated her own sons, Archdukes Ferdinand and Maximilian. To show the public these children were healthy and thriving, she hosted a grand dinner at Schönbrunn Palace. The Empress personally served 65 of the inoculated children, demonstrating her trust in the procedure and helping overcome widespread fear of inoculation in Europe. Her actions led to widespread acceptance of inoculation throughout Austria and beyond, saving countless lives from the deadly disease that had taken her daughter."

"In 1902, Jack London, an American novelist, journalist and activist, visited the slums of Whitechapel in the East End of London. He dressed in filthy rags and lived among the common people for seven weeks while taking notes of the foul tenements, starving children, alcoholics, stunted humans and bottomless despair.

"What I wish to do is to go down into the East End and see things for myself. I wish to know how those people are living there, and why they are living there, and what they are living for.

In short, I am going to live there myself." Jack wrote about his experiences in his book, The People of the Abyss. Below is the beginning of Chapter 23, The Children:

"Where home is a hovel, and dull we grovel, forgetting the world is fair."

There is one beautiful sight in the East End, and only one, and it is the children dancing in the street

when the organ-grinder goes his round. It is fascinating to watch them, the new-born, the next generation, swaying and stepping, with pretty little mimicries and graceful inventions all their own, with muscles that move swiftly and easily, and bodies that leap airily, weaving rhythms never taught in dancing school.

I have talked with these children, here, there, and everywhere, and they struck me as being bright as other children, and in many ways even brighter. They have most active little imaginations.

Their capacity for projecting themselves into the realm of romance and fantasy is remarkable. A joyous life is romping in their blood. They delight in music, and motion, and colour, and very often they betray a startling beauty of face and form under their filth and rags. But there is a Pied Piper of London Town who steals them all away. They disappear. One never sees them again, or anything that suggests them. You may look for them in vain amongst the generation of grown-ups. Here you will find stunted forms, ugly faces, and blunt and stolid minds. Grace, beauty, imagination, all the resiliency of mind and muscle, are gone. Sometimes, however, you may see a woman, not necessarily old, but twisted and deformed out of all womanhood, bloated and drunken, lift her draggled skirts and execute a few grotesque and lumbering steps upon the pavement. It is a hint that she was once one of those children who danced to the organ-grinder.

Those grotesque and lumbering steps are all that is left of the promise of childhood. In the befogged recesses of her brain has arisen a fleeting memory that she was once a girl. The crowd closes in. Little girls are dancing beside her, about her, with all the pretty graces she dimly recollects, but can no more than parody with her body. Then she pants for breath, exhausted, and stumbles out through the circle. But the little girls dance on. The children of the Ghetto possess all the qualities which make for noble manhood and womanhood; but the Ghetto itself, like an infuriated tigress turning on its young, turns upon and destroys all these qualities, blots out the light and laughter, and moulds those it does not kill into sodden and forlorn creatures, uncouth, degraded, and wretched below the beasts of the field. As to the manner in which this is done, I have in previous chapters described it at length; here let Professor Huxley describe it in brief:...

"Anyone who is acquainted with the state of the population of all great industrial centres, whether in this or other countries, is aware that amidst a large and increasing body of that population there reigns supreme that condition which the French call la misère, a word for which I do not think there is any exact English equivalent. It is a condition in which the food, warmth, and clothing which are necessary for the mere maintenance of the functions of the body in their normal state cannot be obtained, in which men, women, and children are forced to crowd into dens wherein decency is abolished, and the most ordinary conditions of healthful existence are impossible of attainment; in which the pleasures within reach are reduced to brutality and drunkenness; in which the pains accumulate at compound interest in the shape of starvation, disease, stunted development, and moral degradation; in which the prospect of even steady and honest industry is a life of unsuccessful battling with hunger, rounded by a pauper's grave." In such conditions, the outlook for children is hopeless. They die like flies, and those that survive, survive because they possess excessive vitality and a capacity of adaptation to the degradation with which they are surrounded. They have no home life. In the dens and lairs in which they live they are exposed to all that is obscene and indecent. And as their minds are made rotten, so are their bodies made rotten by bad sanitation, overcrowding, and underfeeding. When a father and mother live with three or four children in a room where the children take turnabout in sitting up to drive the rats away from the sleepers, when those children never have enough to eat and are preyed upon and made miserable and weak by swarming vermin, the sort of men and women the survivors will make can readily be imagined."

"It took 50 years, but the truth is finally out. The Warren Commission lied. The government covered it up. JFK's assassination was not the act of a lone gunman; it was a full-blown military intelligence coup. JFK had signed The Tonkin Act, effecting pulling all troops out of Southeast Asia-(Vietnam). Lady Byrd Johnson owned control and interest in Kellogg/ Brown & Root, later merger, KBR, INC, Halliburton, Inc. who made most of the munitions the United States Military used to fight the Vietnam War. Just one small piece of the puzzle. Part - The Military Industrial Complex. The day after JFK was assassinated, President Lyndon Baines Johnson rescinded the Tonkin Act, giving President Johnson authority to increase involvement in the war between North and South Vietnam. Declassified documents released January 30, 2025, expose what many of us have long suspected: JFK was murdered by the very system he tried to dismantle. He challenged the Federal Reserve, the CIA, and the shadow elite. He signed Executive Order 11110 to return to sound money. Within months, he was dead. And what followed was decades of lies, cover-ups, and silencing of truth. The files reveal CIA death squads (Operation Execute), a "JFK hit memo" from the Federal Reserve, and names like E. Howard Hunt, David Atlee Phillips, and even George H.W. Bush linked to that dark day in Dallas. Even more chilling, JFK knew they were coming for him. A newly surfaced audio tape confirms it. "They'll come for me soon... But if I fall, let history know I tried to warn them."

To misuse language is to use it the way politicians and advertisers do, for profit, without taking responsibility for what the words mean. Language used as a means to get power or make money goes wrong: it lies. Language used as an end in itself, to sing a poem or tell a story, goes right, goes towards the truth. A writer is a person who cares what words mean, what they say, how they say it. Writers know words are their way towards truth and freedom, and so they use them with care, with thought, with fear, with delight. By using words well, they strengthen their souls. Storytellers and poets spend their lives learning that skill and art of using words well. And their words make the souls of their readers stronger, brighter, deeper."

"To quell any revolt in advance, it must not be violently attacked. Hitler's methods are outdated.

Just create a collective conditioning so powerful that even the idea of revolt will not even cross the minds of men. The ideal would be to train individuals from birth by limiting their innate biological abilities.

Next, we would continue conditioning by drastically reducing education, to bring it back to a form of professional placement. An uneducated individual has only a limited thinking horizon and the more his thinking is confined to mediocre concerns, the less he can revolt. Access to knowledge must be made increasingly difficult and elitist. Let the gap be widened between the people and science, that the information intended for the general public be anesthetized from any subversive content.

Especially no philosophy. Again, persuasion must be used and not direct violence: we will broadcast massively, via television, entertainment that always flatter the emotional or instinct. Let's occupy our minds with the futile and playful. It's good, in incessant chatter and music, to stop the mind from thinking. We will put sexuality at the forefront of human interests. Like social calmer, there's nothing better. Generally, we will make sure to ban the seriousness of existence, to ridicule everything of high value, to maintain a constant apology of frivolity; so that the euphoria of publicity becomes the standard of human happiness and the model of freedom. Conditioning will thus produce such an integration by itself, that the only fear, which will have to be maintained, will be that of being excluded from the system and therefore not being able to access the conditions necessary for happiness. The man of the masses, thus produced, must be treated as he is: a calf, and he must be watched over as a herd should be. Anything that allows one to sleep his lucidity is socially good, what would threaten to wake him up must be ridiculed, strangled, fought. Any doctrine challenging the system must first be designated as subversive and terrorist and those supporting it must then be treated as such.

"This and the other ai critiques I've heard are so interesting to listen to ~ (Denny)
 Certainly, very in-depth discussions and interpretations of your work and all sounds very authoritative.
 It strikes me though that we who know you and have witnessed and shared in how you live and work, as you have produced this enormous body of ever evolving literary and visual form over so many years;
 could write quite a different interpretation of all this creation, which would maybe show more of the man and the manner 😊. For me the inspiration and enjoyment of your work has been the way your work is an integral part and product of the way you live. A witnessing, reporting and recording of the myriad travels, meetings, conversations and thoughts as well as happenings you have experienced in real life.
 They are generally not the musings of a hermit writer lost in thought and fantasy or even "lost in the digital world" (made me laugh 😂😂), but a raw description and frank discussion of a life lived to the full and of the real conversations had with multiple people in a myriad of places on multiple subjects. Then your reflections and remarking and your comments, achieved through such clever juxtaposition of ideas. It can be described as reportage, recording, witnessing and discussing, a plethora of word paintings and memorable phrases.
 Many of us remember the chai, the ever-present notebook, the pen and the frantic scribbling down of phrases ~ the "hang on a minute, say that again" 😊☀️
 the hours and hours and days, weeks and years of closeted computer compilation, remark, edit, reflect, composition and revision: hard work; resulting in the ever growing, evolving and impressive creation.
 The Product, the books, paintings and cards are not the only aspect of your Art which are important.
 Maybe the true inspiration is in the Process ~ the unique man living a unique life and sharing his vision and perspective on the world with the world through engaging fully with the world. Full power SJ! ❤️"

Beneath the sun-drenched palms of India, "Siddhartha" weaves a tapestry of yearning and epiphany.

It's the story of a young Brahmin who, dissatisfied with the rigid rituals of his faith, sets off on a self-inflicted odyssey. He shaves his head, dons the ochre robes of an ascetic, and plunges into the unknown, hoping to find enlightenment. His path twists and turns like the Ganges.

He joins the Samanas, seeking wisdom in self-denial, only to find emptiness. He indulges in the sensual pleasures of the merchant Kamaswami yet feels a hollowness bloom within. Each pursuit, each teacher, each experience becomes a stepping stone, leading him closer to the elusive truth.

But enlightenment, Siddhartha learns, isn't found in temples or riches. It whispers in the rustle of leaves, the flow of the river, the beat of his own heart. He becomes a ferryman, his hands calloused by oar and rope, his soul cleansed by the rhythm of the river. He learns from the river's silence, its unwavering patience, its eternal dance with life and death. Throughout his journey, Siddhartha encounters Govinda, his loyal friend and foil. Govinda seeks solace in the Buddha's teachings, finding comfort in the rigidity of doctrine. Siddhartha, however, remains a lone wolf, forever restless, forever seeking. He encounters Kamala, a courtesan who teaches him the language of love and loss, her touch leaving an indelible mark on his soul. Years melt into decades, wrinkles etch themselves onto Siddhartha's face, mirroring the wisdom etched into his soul. He learns to accept imperfection, to embrace the contradictions within himself, to find peace in the ever-flowing river of life.

In the end, sitting beneath the same banyan tree where he first questioned his path, Siddhartha finds his answer not in grand pronouncements but in the quiet hum of existence, the gentle acceptance of all that is and all that will be. "Siddhartha" is not a blueprint for enlightenment, but a symphony of self-discovery. It's a tapestry woven with doubt and despair, love and loss, ultimately culminating in a quiet acceptance of life's mysteries. It's a reminder that the real journey isn't about finding the destination, but about embracing the ever-unfolding path, the river whispering its secrets only to those who listen with their hearts."

On this day, 21 March 1991, the abolition of the poll tax in the UK was announced, following a mass non-payment campaign and widespread rioting. The hated tax, introduced by Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government, charged the working class the same as the rich as there was a charge for every individual in a household.

Despite the defeat of the working class movement in Britain in the 1980s, people up and down the country self-organised an unprecedented campaign which resulted in over 17 million people refusing to pay, with thousands of people clogging the country's court system.

First, the movement brought down Thatcher herself, leading to her resignation in November 1990.

The new government then announced the abolition of the tax. It was later replaced by the council tax, which charged rates based on house value.

Facts About Democide

1. 49% of the democide deaths in Soviet Russia between 1917-1987 were caused due to the conditions of camps people were forced into. Just 5% of people were killed because of deportation.
2. Between 1900-1987, 46.6% of the deaths that have occurred in China can be attributed to democide.
In comparison, 42.6% of the deaths in the time period are attributed to famine.
3. Ten different government regimes between 1900-1987 murdered 1,000,000 people or more, but less than 10 million people.
4. Rwanda joined the 1 million murder democide club in just 4 months of being in power.
5. The total number of people killed by democide since 1900: 242 million.
6. If all these bodies were laid head to toe, average height of 5', then they would circle the Earth 10 times.
7. Communist China is believed to be responsible for over 76 million deaths between 1949-1987, which is 15 million more than the USSR era in Russia.
8. Between 1948-1987, North Korea is believed to have murdered 1.66 million people.
9. The Allied Powers are also on the democide list. The United Kingdom is believed to be responsible for 816,000 democide deaths since 1900.
10. 5 different regimes are believed to have killed more than 10 million people. Two of those regimes are based in China.
11. China also has a place in the top mega murderer lists and the centi-kilo murder lists as well, which when all totalled together means China has been responsible for about 1 in 3 democide deaths in the last century.
12. A vast majority of the incidents of democide from non-Communist governments occurred during the years before and during World War II.
13. Between 1900-1920, Mexico was responsible for 1.4 million democide deaths.
14. In 4 years, Cambodia became the 8th ranked democidal government, killing 2.035 million citizens.
15. Turkey, Russia, and China all on list of top governments responsible for democide at least 2 times.
16. The Top 5 government entities that have killed people through democide are responsible for over 219 million deaths.

17. During the years before and during World War II, Japan was responsible for 5.9 million deaths.

18. Vietnam has been responsible for 1.67 million deaths by democide from 1945-1987.

19. In the broad category of colonialism, it is estimated that 50 million people were killed in total by their governments or an opposing government regime.

According to information provided by Rummel, democide is the leading cause of non-natural death in the 20th century. It doesn't have to be a direct action of murder to qualify under Rummel's terminology. The British actions in shipping away food supplies from India to create an artificial famine and the Holocaust would both be considered instances of democide.

And this doesn't take into consideration the countless millions who have been murdered by the US Government, both at home and abroad...in Iraq alone, the embargo during the Clinton administration was responsible for at least 250,000 women and children STARVING to death...

CPJ honours the legacy of veteran Palestinian-American journalist Shireen Abu Akleh on the third anniversary of her murder. On May 11, 2022, Israel fatally shot 51-year-old Abu Akleh while wearing a press vest in a targeted attack while covering an Israeli army operation in the West Bank town of Jenin.

For 25 years as an Al Jazeera correspondent, Abu Akleh was a trailblazer for women in journalism and a trusted voice for millions of viewers in the region. Her iconic sign off at the end of news reports "Shireen Abu Akleh, Al Jazeera, Ramallah, Palestine," was echoed by Palestinians girls who would recite it growing up, inspiring the next generation of women journalists, TRT World reported in an article just after her death. "I wanted to be her someday, to present Palestinian life to the world and to say how much we suffer, and despite all of the suffering we can live and we can smile," Fayha Shalash, Al Aqsa radio journalist in Ramallah, told the outlet. Abu Akleh worked for Voice of Palestine Radio and the Amman Satellite Channel before joining Al Jazeera Media Network in 1997, a year after it was launched. Called the "daughter of Palestine" and the "voice of Palestine," she became known for her sensitive reporting about day-to-day Palestinian life under Israeli occupation, as well as her coverage of major news events. A new documentary by U.S.-based media company Zeteo claims to have identified the Israeli soldier who killed Palestinian-American journalist Shireen Abu Akleh, highlighting the failure of American and international authorities in investigating the case and securing justice. We continue to call on the U.S. to investigate her killing by Israel hold those responsible to account. "In difficult moments, I overcame fear. I chose journalism to be close to people. It is not easy, perhaps, to change reality, but I was at least able to get that voice out to the world," she said, in a video marking Al Jazeera's 25th anniversary from Middle East Eye. "I am Shireen Abu Akleh." They compel us to remember the horrors of the past while simultaneously celebrating the moments when light pierced through the deepest shadows of despair. Reflecting on this pivotal event, it becomes clear that the rescue from the death train was more than just the freeing of individuals-

it was the restoration of dignity and a powerful affirmation of life in the face of utter devastation.

Today, this story continues to educate and inspire, urging us to never forget the lessons of history and to steadfastly champion human rights and compassion in an often-troubled world." Unfortunately, some traumatising experiences can be soon forgotten and often repeated...

"In 1997, environmental activist Julia Butterfly Hill made a bold and unconventional decision: she climbed 180 feet into the branches of a 1,000-year-old redwood tree in Northern California and stayed there. The tree, which she named "Luna" was targeted for logging by the Pacific Lumber Company. Determined to protect it, Julia transformed her protest into a long-term act of resistance that would captivate and inspire people around the world. For 738 days, Julia lived high above the forest floor on a small platform, enduring fierce weather, loneliness, and even threats from opponents. Her goal was to raise awareness about the destruction of ancient forests, and her commitment drew international media attention. Despite the hardships, she remained peaceful and focused, turning her tree-sit into one of the most memorable acts of environmental civil disobedience in history. In December 1999, her efforts paid off. An agreement was reached to preserve Luna and a 200-foot buffer zone around it, protecting not just the tree but also its fragile surrounding ecosystem. Julia's story became a powerful symbol of what one individual can achieve through courage and determination. Today, her legacy continues to inspire activists and nature lovers across the globe."

Women in ancient Egypt were regarded as the equals of men in every aspect save that of occupation.

It is often assumed that women in the ancient world held little power or influence.

However, women

in ancient Egypt could become highly influential physicians, political advisors, scribes or even rulers.

But like women in many cultures throughout history and today, they had to fight to acquire and hold onto their rights. The man was the head of the household and nation, but women ran the home and contributed to the stability of that nation as artisans, brewers, doctors, musicians, scribes, and many other jobs, sometimes even those involving authority over men.

One of central values of ancient Egyptian civilization, arguably the central value, was ma'at ~

the concept of harmony and balance in all aspects of one's life. This ideal was the most important duty observed by the pharaoh who, as the mediator between the gods and the people, was supposed to be a role model for how one lived a balanced life. Egyptian art, architecture, religious practices, and even governmental agencies all exhibit a perfect symmetry of balance and this can also be seen in gender roles throughout the history of ancient Egyptian civilization.

Women's social standing, however, depended on the support and approval of men and, in some cases, was denied or challenged. It also seems clear that many women were not aware of their rights and so never exercised them. Even so, the respect accorded to women in ancient Egypt is evident in almost every aspect of the civilization from religious beliefs to social customs. The gods were both male and female, and each had their own equally important areas of expertise. Women could marry who they wanted and divorce those who no longer suited them, could hold what jobs they liked – within limits – and travel as they pleased. The earliest creation myths of the culture all emphasize, to greater or lesser degrees, the value of the feminine principle.

Women in ancient Egypt worked in many jobs traditionally dedicated to them, but they were powerful enough to be independent, have their own workshops producing textiles, jewellery and other goods, and even take an important role in political life, become physicians or scribes. Although, they were underestimated by many historians for centuries, their strong position in the powerful civilization of ancient Egypt could be an inspiration for modern women in many parts of the world. After thousands of years of equal rights, Ptolemy IV tried to stop the strong tradition of cults of women. He changed the law and cancelled many rights that had made women equal to men. It was the beginning of the dark age characteristic for the upcoming dominating beliefs, which had their roots in Rome and Greece. However, Egyptian women didn't want to accept a patriarchal society. Until the power of the Egyptian civilization came to an end, they fought for their rights. Commonly, researchers accept that the end of Egyptian women's independence arrived with the death of the great scientist Hypatia in 415 AD. Before that event took place, Ancient Egyptian women had thrived in society for more than three millennia.

Hard Times by Charles Dickens, published in 1854, is a powerful and biting social critique set in the fictional industrial town of Coketown. Known for its stark portrayal of the dehumanizing effects of industrialization and utilitarianism, this novel is one of Dickens's most focused, impactful works...

The story revolves around Thomas Gradgrind, a rigid, fact-obsessed schoolmaster who believes in the philosophy of utilitarianism - measuring everything by its practical value and dismissing imagination, emotions, and creativity. Gradgrind raises his children, Louisa and Tom, under this oppressive system, stifling their individuality and joy. Louisa, in particular, becomes a tragic figure, trapped in a loveless marriage to the wealthy but callous factory owner Josiah Bounderby. Meanwhile, the novel explores the lives of the working-class characters, such as Stephen Blackpool, a humble and honest factory worker who suffers under the harsh conditions of industrial labour. His struggles highlight the exploitation and inequality of the time, as well as the moral failings of a society driven solely by profit and efficiency.

Dickens's sharp satire and vivid characters bring the injustices of the Victorian era to life. Through the contrasting worlds of the Gradgrind family and the factory workers, he critiques the heartlessness of industrialization, the flaws of utilitarian philosophy, and the neglect of human compassion and creativity.

*The novel's famous first line, "Now, what I want is, Facts. Teach these boys and girls nothing but Facts" sets the tone for its exploration of the dangers of a world stripped of imagination and empathy. Hard Times is a compelling and thought-provoking novel that remains relevant today. Its themes of social inequality, the value of education, and the importance of human connection resonate deeply, making it a timeless critique of a society that prioritizes profit over people. With its memorable characters, moral urgency, and Dickens's..."*

“On 18 March 1871, the Paris commune, one of the most significant early attempts at a working class uprising to create socialism, was established. France had been defeated by Germany in war, and while the government planned to surrender, the population of Paris refused. So, the French government, collaborating with Germany, sent troops to the city to disarm the national guard and seize their cannons. Thousands of Parisian women then confronted government troops, positioning themselves between soldiers and the national guard. General Claude Lecomte ordered his soldiers to fire on the crowd, but they refused. Lecomte was then captured and executed. Paris residents then built barricades and succeeded in expelling the army from the city. Together, mutinous national guardsmen, women, and other workers took control of Paris, dismantled the existing state institutions, and instead set about re-organising society on a directly democratic, socialist basis. The communards established a democratic system with universal male suffrage, where all functionaries were elected, paid the salary of an average worker, and were revocable, if they did not implement the will of the workers. The rebels separated the church and state, socialised church property, and established the right to universal, free and secular education. They destroyed the guillotine, closed down pawn shops, and took over empty factories and workshops, handing over to their workers to run them collectively. Public kitchens were set up to feed the poor, and empty homes of wealthy people were requisitioned to house poor families. Unmarried women and their children were given the same allowances as married women. Women organised a union, called for gender equality, and organised healthcare and assistance for the defence of the city. The communards were able to hold the city until late May when, upon retaking the city, troops massacred thousands of workers in bloody revenge”

“When someone directs negativity toward you, the most powerful response isn’t always kindness ~ it’s reflection. Not out of pettiness, but as a clear message that you refuse to be disrespected.

You don't have to argue, explain, or prove your worth. Simply hold up a mirror. Match their energy, their silence, their distance, their indifference. Let them experience what it's like to be on the receiving end of their own behaviour. Some people only understand their impact when they feel it themselves. They assume they can say or do anything without consequence, that you will endlessly absorb their negativity without reaction. But you are not a dumping ground for other people's unresolved issues. You are not obligated to entertain toxicity or make excuses for someone's harmful behaviour. Protect your peace, set your boundaries, and stand firm in your self-respect. Not every battle needs to be fought with words. Sometimes, the greatest lesson you can teach someone is allowing them to feel exactly what they give. And sometimes, that's the only way they'll ever learn."

*“Aldous Huxley, renowned English writer, philosopher, and social critic, gained international fame through works such as Brave New World (1932), which explored themes of dystopia, individualism, and the impact of technology on society. His writing, especially in the 20th century, remains highly influential in both literary and philosophical circles. The quote shared reflects Huxley’s introspective approach to navigating the complexities of life, drawing from his broader belief in human resilience and the importance of personal freedom. It offers insight into his deep understanding of human psychology, emphasizing the need to release emotional baggage and adopt a more fluid approach to existence. Huxley’s philosophical journey was notably shaped by his exploration of altered states of consciousness. During the 1950s, he became a prominent advocate for the responsible use of psychedelics, particularly mescaline, which he explored in his 1954 book The Doors of Perception. His belief in the transcendence of the ordinary mind through experiences of heightened awareness aligns with the sentiments expressed in the quote. He emphasized the importance of seeing life through a lens of lightness and spontaneity, encouraging individuals to free themselves from the constraints of societal pressures, fear, and self-imposed limitations. This perspective reflects his broader views on human potential and the search for meaning beyond materialism. Huxley’s ideas were revolutionary for his time, particularly as the world faced immense change and upheaval during* the first half of the 20th century. His thoughts on fear, self-pity, and despair, encapsulated in the notion of walking "lightly," resonate with modern approaches to mindfulness and personal growth. The concept of letting go of baggage is central to many contemporary wellness philosophies, underscoring how Huxley's insights continue to echo across generations. His emphasis on shedding the weight of unnecessary burdens remains relevant today as individuals seek clarity and purpose in an increasingly fast-paced world."

“Friedrich Nietzsche was the protagonist of one of the most moral episodes in the history of Western thinkers. It was 1889 and the philosopher lived in a house in via Carlo Alberto, in Turin. One morning, as he headed to the city centre, he found himself faced with a scene that changed his life forever.

He saw a coachman hitting his horse hard, exhausted and unable to continue. The animal was completely exhausted, with no more strength to move forward. However, the man continued to whip him to force him to move despite the obvious fatigue.

Nietzsche was shocked by what was happening. He quickly approached and, after scolding the coachman for his behaviour, he hugged the horse now on the ground and began to cry. Witnesses say that he whispered a few words in his ear, words that no one could hear. According to legend, the philosopher's last words were:

“Mother, I'm stupid”

After that moment, Nietzsche fell to the ground unconscious and his mind collapsed. He didn't speak for the next ten years, until his death. He never managed to resume his rational life after that episode.

The police were notified, and the philosopher was arrested for disturbing public order. Shortly after, he was taken to a sanatorium.” The Classic Friedrich Nietzsche Collection: “The society of the time considered Nietzsche's gesture - hugging the mistreated horse and crying with him as a manifestation of his madness. Although many still see the episode today as the result of his mental illness, there are also deeper and more conscious interpretations.

The writer Milan Kundera, in his novel The Unsustainable Lightness of Being, takes up the episode of Nietzsche and interprets it as a request for forgiveness. According to Kundera, Nietzsche apologised to the horse on behalf of all humanity, for the cruelty with which we treat other living beings, for having transformed ourselves into their executioners and having subjected them to our service.

Nietzsche was not known for a particular interest in the animal world or for an environmental sensitivity, but undoubtedly the episode of mistreatment had a huge impact on him. That horse was the last being with whom he established real and emotional contact. He did not identify so much with the animal itself, as with his pain, finding a bond that transcended the immediate. It was an identification with life.

Today more people, both inside and outside the scientific field, recognise how aberrant animal abuse is."

"Paradise Lost" a timeless epic poem by John Milton, offers a unique perspective on the age-old story of the fall of man. From an unconventional standpoint, one could view it as an exploration of the complexities of free will and divine providence. While the narrative primarily focuses on the rebellion of Satan and the subsequent expulsion of Adam and Eve from the Garden of Eden, it delves deeper into the philosophical questions surrounding the nature of good and evil.

In this unique perspective, "Paradise Lost" can be seen as a reflection on the intricacies of human agency, and divine plan. Milton's portrayal of Satan as a complex and charismatic character challenges traditional notions of evil, inviting readers to ponder the blurred lines between villainy and rebellion against oppressive authority. Furthermore, the poem explores the concept of redemption and the idea that suffering and loss can ultimately lead to spiritual growth and a deeper understanding of one's relationship with the divine.

It presents a vision of a fallen world that, paradoxically, provides an opportunity for humanity to attain a higher level of wisdom and virtue through their struggles and redemption. In essence, "Paradise Lost" is not merely a story of disobedience and punishment, but a profound meditation on the human condition, the consequences of our choices, and the possibility of redemption, all viewed through the prism of divine guidance and providence. It challenges us to reconsider our preconceptions about morality, fate, and the nature of good and evil in a thought-provoking and enduring manner."

“Appeasement negotiations with the aggressor don’t work. What Great Britain tried to do it with Hitler. Following is the wording of a printed statement that the British Prime Minister, Neville Chamberlain, waved as he stepped off the plane on 30 Sept. 1938 after the Munich Conference had ended a day before: “We, the German Führer and Chancellor, and the British Prime Minister, have had a further meeting today and are agreed in recognizing that the question of Anglo-German relations is of the first importance for our two countries and for Europe. We regard the agreement signed last night and the Anglo-German Naval Agreement as symbolic of the desire of our two peoples never to go to war with one another again. We are resolved that the method of consultation shall be the method adopted to deal with any other questions that may concern our two countries, and we are determined to continue our efforts to remove possible sources of difference, and thus to contribute to assure the peace of Europe.” Chamberlain read the above statement in front of 10 Downing St. and said: “My good friends, for the second time in our history, a British Prime Minister has returned from Germany bringing peace with honour. I believe it is peace for our time... Go home and get a nice quiet sleep.” One year later, Hitler started World War II.”

"The term "checkmate" originates from the Persian phrase "shah mat," which means "the king is helpless" or "the king is dead." This phrase was used in the context of chess, a game that was first played in India and later spread to Persia. "Monopoly wasn't invented by the Parker Brothers, nor the man they gave it credit for. In 1904, Monopoly was originally called The Landlord's Game, and was invented by a radical woman. Elizabeth Magie's original game had not one, but two sets of rules to choose from.

One was called "Prosperity", where every player won money anytime another gained a property.

And the game was won by everyone playing only when the person with the least doubled their resources.

A game of collaboration and social good. The second set of rules was called "Monopoly", where players succeeded by taking properties and rent from those with less luck rolling the dice. The winner was the person who used their power to eliminate everyone else. Magie's mission was to teach us how different

we feel when playing Prosperity vs Monopoly, hoping that it would one day change national policies.*

When the Parker Bros adopted the game, they erased Magie, erased the "Prosperity" rules and celebrated

 Since robbery under arms was a common aspect of seaborne trade, until the early 19th century all merchant ships carried arms. A sovereign or delegated authority issued commissions, referred to as letters of marque, during wartime. The commission empowered the holder to carry on all forms of hostility permissible at sea by the usages of war. This included attacking foreign vessels and taking them as prizes and taking crews prisoner for exchange. Captured ships were subject to condemnation and sale under prize law, with the proceeds divided by percentage between the privateer's sponsors, shipowners, captains and crew.
 A percentage share usually went to the issuer of the commission (i.e. the sovereign). Most colonial powers, as well as other countries, engaged in privateering. Privateering allowed sovereigns to multiply their naval forces at relatively low cost by mobilizing privately owned armed ships and sailors to supplement state power. For participants, privateering provided the potential for a greater income and profit than obtainable as a merchant seafarer or fisher while avoiding the dangers associated with outright piracy.
 However, the line between privateers and pirates was not always clear.”

$100 BILLION STOLEN FROM TAXPAYERS THROUGH MEDICARE!”

Elon Musk has detonated the most explosive revelation in modern history, sending Washington’s power brokers into a desperate scramble to contain the fallout. A staggering $100 BILLION.

siphoned from the American people, funnelled through a system designed not to provide healthcare, but to fuel covert operations, line elite pockets, and sustain an agenda that was never meant to be uncovered.

With Trump’s Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE) peeling back the layers of corruption,

Musk’s team has gained limited yet damning access to the Centres for Medicare & Medicaid Services,

(CMS), the agency responsible for over one billion Medicare claims annually. What they’ve uncovered isn’t just a broken system—it’s a well-oiled criminal empire. Medicare serves 68 million Americans.

Between June and October 2024, CMS was forced to suspend 850 agents and brokers for fraud, from unauthorized enrolments to illegal plan switches. These were not isolated incidents.

They were part of a larger, calculated financial attack embedded in the very core of government healthcare. The Justice Department has been aware for years. In June 2024, the DOJ indicted 193 defendants—76 of them medical professionals in a $2.75 billion Medicare fraud operation. Yet these were only the foot soldiers.

The true architects remain untouched, operating above the law. Since 2007, over 5,400 defendants have been charged, with more than $27 billion stolen. Still, nothing has stopped the looting. Musk’s read-only access has confirmed what insiders have whispered about for decades—this isn’t mere fraud.

It’s a state-sanctioned theft operation, orchestrated by corrupt officials, the pharmaceutical-industrial complex, and intelligence agencies treating healthcare as their bottomless financial war chest.

The missing $100 billion isn’t missing at all. It’s been redirected into black ops funding, financing

CIA shadow programs, experimental weapon development, and covert global influence campaigns.

Big Pharma’s role is undeniable, using fraudulent Medicare payouts to keep hospitals, doctors, and insurers locked into their control. Stolen funds also grease the wheels of political machinery—untraceable slush funds financing election interference and opposition suppression. The laundering mechanisms are intricate, cycling through shell companies, offshore accounts, and private equity firms, ensuring those at the top remain untouchable. Now, the Deep State is preparing its counterattack. Media is mobilizing a disinformation blitz, branding Musk's findings as "exaggerated" and dismissing his team as "unqualified." The DOJ and intelligence agencies are poised to retaliate, likely fabricating an investigation into Musk's access to CMS data under the guise of "national security concerns." Expect sudden SEC probes into Tesla, antitrust pressure on SpaceX, and government threats against Starlink—all calculated moves to silence him. The evidence itself is in danger. Cyber warfare and "system glitches" could conveniently erase key data before the public ever sees it. If that fails, personal attacks are inevitable. Expect leaks, "anonymous sources," and strategically timed scandals designed to discredit Musk before the truth fully surfaces. This is the moment that will determine who truly controls America. The $100 billion Medicare heist is more than just financial fraud - it's a revelation that threatens to unravel the entire power structure. If the full extent of this operation is exposed, it won't just shake Washington - it will collapse the entire corrupt establishment. This is the war Trump's DOGE was created for. The choice now falls to the American people: Will they allow the cover-up to succeed?

Or will they demand the exposure of those who have stolen, lied, and manipulated for decades?"

CONCIOUS CHOICE

"Choice is the most powerful force we possess. Every moment, every step, and every decision shapes the path ahead. We exist in a universe of limitless possibilities, where each choice we make closes some doors but opens countless others. Our lives are not set in stone; they are fluid, ever-changing, and shaped by the power of our decisions. Too often, we feel trapped by our circumstances, believing that we have no control over our fate. But the truth is, we are never truly stuck, we are simply facing a series of choices we have yet to make.

Every decision, no matter how small, creates a ripple effect that can lead us toward transformation. The question is not whether we have the power to change, but whether we have the courage to choose differently.

Fear often holds us back from embracing the full power of choice. We hesitate, afraid of making the wrong decision, afraid of uncertainty, or afraid of stepping outside the familiar. But the reality is, there is no such thing as a "perfect" choice ~ there is only action or inaction, movement or stagnation.

Growth comes from stepping forward, even if we are unsure of where the path leads. Imagine how different life could be if we fully embraced this truth. If instead of waiting for circumstances to change, we actively made choices that aligned with our deepest desires. If instead of fearing failure, we saw every choice as an opportunity to learn and evolve. At any moment, we can decide to change our mindset, take a new direction, or let go of what no longer serves us. Ask yourself: Are you making choices that bring you closer to the life you truly want, or are you letting fear keep you in place? The power has always been within you. What will you choose today?

The Brothers Karamazov

"He was Russia's prodigal son, its wayward genius, a man who strayed into the abyss and crawled back with the scars to prove it. Fyodor Dostoyevsky had once stood before a firing squad, a blindfold wrapped tight over his eyes, his breath shallow as he awaited the final command. It was December 1849, and he was a young radical then, convicted of conspiring against the Tsar. At the last moment, the rifles were lowered, his sentence commuted to exile in Siberia. But the man who emerged from those frozen wastes was not the same as the firebrand who had been led away in chains. He had seen human nature stripped bare prisoners who had lost all hope, the bitter cruelty of man, and the desperate clutch of faith in the darkest hour. And yet, the years that followed were still marked by suffering. He lurched from one obsession to the next, gambling, women, debts, fleeing from creditors, losing his wife, chasing ruin across the gambling halls of Europe. He was, in many ways, like the restless and tormented souls who haunted his novels, forever searching for redemption, forever slipping into sin. Then, at the end, he wrote his masterpiece. The Brothers Karamazov was Dostoyevsky's last and greatest work, the summation of a life steeped in agony and grace. The prodigal son is there, in the reckless and passionate Dmitry, who squanders his inheritance in drink and debauchery before being brought low, accused of his own father's murder. And he is there, too, in the quiet, suffering Alyosha, who clings to faith amidst the chaos of a world drowning in doubt. It was a novel of fathers and sons, of forgiveness and despair, of man's ceaseless struggle with himself. When Dostoyevsky died in 1881, the streets of St. Petersburg swelled with mourners, thousands upon thousands, students, beggars, aristocrats paying tribute to a man who had suffered as deeply as he had written. At the end of his life he had settled down, set things in order for his children and remarried a woman he was good to. On his deathbed, he turned to his wife and children and left them with a passage from the Gospel of Luke: "Rejoice, for this my son was dead and is alive again; he was lost and is found"

THE #ASSANGE TRACK : #USAID UNCOVERED - THE POLITICAL WAR MACHINE OF THE WEST!. #Wikileaks REVEALS ALL - BOOM!

Julian Assange drops a BOMB: USAID is NOT an aid organization, it's a political war machine that funds regime change, phony activism, and media manipulation at the service of America's interests.

The so-called "civil society" is a lie: NGOs are nothing but puppets of the world elite.

WikiLeaks has exposed the TRUTH they don't want you to know. NGOs are not what you think - they are weapons of political warfare. For decades, they fed the world with a great deception: that NGOs exist to fight for justice and democracy. LIE! These groups don't fight power; they serve it. Assange sacrificed everything to bring out the truth: NGOs have been hijacked, turned into weapons and used for world control.

Civil society is not "organic", it's bought and sold. Activists, unknowingly, push the agenda of the very elites they believe are fighting against. At the center of this fraud? USAID, the US government's

Trojan horse for domination. USAID: The Global Manipulation Machine

They call it the "aid agency," but in reality, USAID spreads control, not freedom.

This financial agency: Opposition groups to overthrow governments that disobey Washington.

Medios de propaganda disfrazados de «medios independientes».

Fake activism: creation of protests, uprisings and revolutions at the service of Western interests.

If USAID really promoted freedom, why do so many nations prohibit it? Because they KNOW the truth:

it's a tool of regime change, not charity! Fake Activism: The NGO Propaganda Network

USAID does not act alone. Finance Freedom House, a so-called "watchdog" that classifies America's allies as "democratic" and rivals as "authoritarian," without taking into account reality! NEVER criticizes corruption, voter fraud or the West's state of vigilance. Why? Because their masters won't allow it.

This is how consent is manufactured. Fake watchdogs, fake journalism, fake activism:

all at the service of the powerful. Manufactured Protests: How Elites Stage Revolutions

Assange also brought to light the multimillion-dollar circuit of activism, in which

Western governments

fly "leaders of civil society" to world conferences on "democracy" and "human rights". But these events are rigged. Shortlisted voices drive pro-censorship, pro-intervention and pro-globalization agendas.

Everything is a spectacle. An Example? Stockholm's Internet Forum, which claims to promote free speech, but is funded by Western governments and tech giants. This is NOT activism.

This is CONTROL. THE LAST WARNING CALL: YOU'VE BEEN LIED TO!

The civil society sector is a fraud. NGOs are NOT grassroots organizations, they do NOT fight for democracy, they do NOT defend human rights. They are tools of power:

billionaires, intelligence agencies, and politicians who manipulate entire nations.

Julian Assange warned us. So, what happened? They hunted him down, silenced, jailed him.

Because he spoke the truth.

Now the question is: Are you going to wake up? Or will you continue to believe the LIE?

WHAT CAN BE DONE?

Debunking the fraud. Share this NOW! Question all NGOs: who funds them? Who is benefiting?

Reject manufactured activism: follow real dissidents, NOT corporate-backed puppets.

Resist political control: USAID, Freedom House and their networks do NOT serve the people, but the elites. War is not won with guns. He struggles with narratives, media and manipulation.

If we don't stand up, WE WILL LOSE. They killed my life, but they couldn't stop the mission."

All About Cinema

"The Dissident (2020) is a documentary directed by Bryan Fogel, which delves into the shocking murder of journalist Jamal Khashoggi, a prominent Saudi Arabian dissident. The film focuses on Khashoggi's life, his critique of the Saudi regime, and his eventual assassination inside the Saudi consulate in Istanbul in 2018. The documentary presents Khashoggi as a courageous voice of reason, highlighting his transformation from a Saudi insider to a vocal critic of the monarchy. After fleeing Saudi Arabia, Khashoggi lived in exile in the U.S. where he wrote for The Washington Post. His reporting exposed corruption and human rights abuses, particularly those linked to Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman (MBS). The film reveals the dangers Khashoggi faced due to his outspoken stance and the escalating threats against him. Fogel's investigation into Khashoggi's murder uncovers details about the high-level Saudi operation behind the killing. The film features interviews with Khashoggi's friends, family, and human rights activists, as well as powerful footage and recordings that reveal the brutality of the crime. It also explores the role of Western governments, including the U.S., in downplaying the incident and continuing diplomatic ties with the Saudi regime despite mounting evidence of MBS's involvement. The Dissident challenges viewers to consider the broader implications of Khashoggi's murder, including the suppression of free speech, the repression of dissidents, and the lengths to which authoritarian regimes will go to silence their critics. The film raises ethical questions about the complicity of global powers in maintaining relationships with oppressive regimes, making it a poignant and timely exploration of political corruption and the cost of speaking truth to power."

With CIA fingerprints on it. (Oliver Stone, 2014)

"I interviewed Viktor Yanukovych 4 hours in Moscow for new English language documentary produced by Ukrainians. He was the legitimate President of Ukraine until he suddenly wasn't on February 22, 2014. It seems clear that the so-called 'shooters' who killed 14 police men, wounded some 85, and killed 45 protesting civilians, were outside third party agitators. Many witnesses, including Yanukovych and police officials, believe these foreign elements were introduced by pro-Western factions-- Remember the Chavez 'regime change'/coup of 2002 when he was temporarily ousted after pro and anti-Chavez demonstrators were fired upon by mysterious shooters in office buildings. Also resembles similar technique early this year in Venezuela when Maduro's legally elected Government was almost toppled by violence aimed at anti-Maduro protestors. Create enough chaos, as the CIA did in Iran '53, Chile '73, and countless other coups, and the legitimate Government can be toppled. It's America's soft power technique called 'Regime Change 101.'

In this case the "Maidan Massacre" was featured in Western media as the result of an unstable, brutal pro-Russian Yanukovych Government. You may recall Yanukovych went along with the February 21 deal with opposition parties and 3 EU foreign ministers to get rid of him by calling for early elections. The next day that deal was meaningless when well-armed, neo-Nazi radicals forced Yanukovych to flee the country with repeated assassination attempts. By the next day, a new pro-Western government was established and immediately recognized by the US (as in the Chavez 2002 coup). A dirty story through and through, but in the tragic aftermath of this coup, the West has maintained the dominant narrative of "Russia in Crimea" whereas the true narrative is "USA in Ukraine." The truth is not being aired in the West. It's a surreal perversion of history that's going on once again, as in Bush pre-Iraq 'WMD' campaign. I believe the truth will finally come out in the West, I hope, in time to stop further insanity.

For a broader understanding, see Pepe Escobar's analysis "The new European 'arc of instability,'" which indicates growing turbulence in 2015, as the US cannot tolerate the idea of any rival economic entity <http://bit.ly/1yBmpHa>. You might also see "Untold History" Chapter 10 where we discuss the dangers of past Empires which did not allow for the emergence of competing economic countries."

“Our strategy should be not only to confront empire, but to lay siege to it. To deprive it of oxygen.

To shame it. To mock it. With our art, our music, our literature, our stubbornness, our joy, our brilliance, our sheer relentlessness - and our ability to tell our own stories. Stories that are different from the ones we're being brainwashed to believe. The corporate revolution will collapse if we refuse to buy what they are selling their ideas, their version of history, their wars, their weapons, their notion of inevitability.” ~Arundhati Roy Monsanto brought it to market for agricultural use in 1974 under the trade name Roundup.” Wikipedia

Washington: Division is not inevitable. Partisan interests use fear and resentment to divide you, but unity is within your power if you choose cooperation over conflict. Putting the US First: A Satirical Look at Trump and Netanyahu's Master Plan for Palestine.

How corrupt and in-your-face could Donald Trump and Benjamin Netanyahu be about their plans for Palestine? Well, if subtlety were an art form, these two would be failed students.

First off, let's make one thing clear: Palestinian land and resources are not up for grabs by the US or anyone else, especially not those who've made it their mission to orchestrate one of the world's most blatant land grabs. The occupied state of Palestine has been turned into an absolute hellhole, courtesy of the US and its favourite "terrorist organization" — Israel, with a dash of Mossad for good measure.

Let's talk about the real agenda here. This isn't just about "peace" (as they'd like to claim) - no, this is a well-planned, carefully engineered strategy by the US and Israel to ethnically cleanse Palestine, clear the path and claim the land along with its untapped oil and gas reserves in the West Bank. Because who wouldn't want to control a region's precious natural resources, especially when it's cloaked in the rhetoric of "freedom" and "security"?

Now, Trump didn't exactly mince words, but he sure knew how to craft them carefully when talking about Palestine. And let's not forget about the pre-selected social media influencers at his carefully orchestrated conference. They too were eager to regurgitate the script handed to them. But here's the thing: Why has no journalist asked the hard question? Why has nobody pointed out that Netanyahu, who is on the International Criminal Court's most-wanted list for his crimes against humanity, continues to dodge responsibility for genocide and atrocities committed in Palestine? Oh, that's right, when you're in bed with the US and Israel, the truth takes a backseat to political convenience. It's almost as if the world is just supposed to ignore the facts, the land theft, war crimes, the apartheid, all in the name of "making peace," right? Don't worry, folks they've got it all figured out. Just ignore the bloodshed and keep focusing on who can tweet the most persuasive propaganda."

government official who served as the head of Saudi Arabia's General Intelligence Presidency from 1979 to 2001. He is a grandson of Saudi's founder King Abdulaziz and son of King Faisal. He is the chairman of the King Faisal Foundation's Center for Research and Islamic Studies.

The letter: Dear President Trump,

The Palestinian people are not illegal immigrants to be deported to other lands. The lands are their lands and the houses that Israel destroyed are their homes, and they will rebuild them as they have done

after previous Israeli onslaughts on them.

Most of the people of Gaza are refugees, driven out of their homes in what is now Israel and the West Bank by the previous Israeli genocidal assault on them in the 1948 and 1967 wars. If they are to be moved from

Gaza, they should be allowed to return to their homes and to their orange and olive groves in Haifa, Jaffa and other towns and villages from which they fled or were forcibly driven out by the Israelis.

Mr President, many of the tens of thousands of immigrants who came to Palestine from Europe and other places after the Second World War stole Palestinian homes and land, terrorised the inhabitants and engaged in a campaign of ethnic cleansing. Alas, America and the UK, the victors of the war, stood by and even facilitated the murderous evictions of the Palestinians from their homes and lands.

America and the UK did not want to receive the victims of Adolf Hitler's Holocaust, so they were content with sending them to Palestine. In the book Eight Days at Yalta, the author Diana Preston refers to a conversation between then US president Franklin Roosevelt and his Russian counterpart Joseph Stalin.

Preston writes: "Conversation turned to the subject of Jewish homelands. Roosevelt said he was a Zionist. When Stalin asked Roosevelt what present he planned to make [Saudi king] Ibn Saud, he replied his only concession might be to give him six million Jews..."

Fortunately, when Mr Roosevelt did meet Ibn Saud, the king disabused him of that offer and suggested that the Jews should be offered the best lands in Germany as compensation for the Holocaust. Alas, Harry Truman, Roosevelt's successor, wholeheartedly supported Jewish immigration to Palestine and eventually became instrumental in the creation of Israel. The violence and bloodshed we witness today are the result of that action and the previous British complicity with Zionist ambitions from 1917 until then. Mr President, your declared intent to bring peace to Palestine is much lauded in our part of the world. I respectfully suggest that the way to do that is to give the Palestinians their inalienable right to self-determination and a state with its capital in East Jerusalem, as envisaged in UN General Assembly Resolutions 181 and 194 and Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, and the Arab Peace Initiative. All the Arab and Islamic countries, as well as the Palestinian Authority, accept the terms of the Arab Peace Initiative to end hostilities and establish relations with Israel. One hundred and forty-nine countries recognise the Palestinian state. Please make your country the 150th. No peace in the Middle East will be realised without addressing this noble issue justly and fairly. Be remembered as the peacemaker. Prince Turki Al Faisal

The Matrix (1999), directed by the Wachowskis, is a groundbreaking science fiction film that explores themes of reality, free will, and human consciousness. Set in a dystopian future, the film follows Neo (Keanu Reeves), a computer hacker who is drawn into a rebellion against intelligent machines that have enslaved humanity by trapping their minds in a simulated reality, known as "the Matrix."

The film begins with Neo discovering that the world he lives in is not real. He is introduced to Morpheus

(Laurence Fishburne), a leader of the human resistance, who reveals that the Matrix is a sophisticated illusion controlled by machines to harvest human energy. Neo is told that he is "The One," a prophesied figure with the potential to break free from the Matrix and end the war between humans and machines.

The Matrix is famous for its revolutionary visual effects, including the iconic "bullet time" slow-motion shots, where action scenes appear to move in extreme slow motion while the camera moves at normal speed. This technique became a hallmark of the film and influenced action filmmaking for years to come.

The film's philosophical and existential themes draw heavily from cyberpunk literature, religious symbolism, and philosophical texts, particularly the ideas of Plato's "Allegory of the Cave" and Descartes' scepticism about reality. The Matrix raises questions about the nature of perception, the boundaries of human consciousness, and the choice between the comfort of illusion and the harshness of truth. Critically acclaimed for its innovative storytelling, visual style, and deep thematic content,

The Matrix became a cultural phenomenon, influencing not only filmmaking but also broader discussions on technology and reality. It remains a staple of modern science fiction cinema."

Ötzi - The Man from the Past

“Ötzi is the name given to one of the best-preserved mummified bodies in Europe. The body was found in Ötztal Alps in 1991, and investigations show that it lived over 5000 years ago (approx. 3400–3100 BC).

After his death, the body became dehydrated, and his remains were naturally mummified in the glacial ice. When the recovery of his body began, numerous leather fragments, strings, pieces of fur and bundles of hay came to light. These were pieces of Ötzi's clothing, which were made of leather, fur and braided grass. A coat, a belt, a pair of trousers, a loincloth, shoes and a cap made of bearskin were found.

Other items scattered around him were a copper axe, a flint dagger, a long stick (later identified as a bow), and a quiver with two ready-made arrows and twelve arrow shafts. Remains of a kind of backpack and two birch bark containers were discovered, one of them with traces of maple leaves and charcoal fragments.

Further investigations showed that his stomach contained traces of various grains, plants, fruits and meat.

61 tattoos in the form of lines and crosses were found on his body. These tattoos were not made with needles, like modern tattoos, but through fine incisions into which powdered charcoal was rubbed.

Later examinations, including X-rays, revealed a flint arrowhead in his left shoulder. The entry wound was in his back. The arrow shattered the shoulder blade and damaged nerves and blood vessels, suggesting that Ötzi may have bled to death. His head also suffered a serious injury, caused either by a fall after the arrow shot or by a blow. He must have been involved in a fight a few days before his death, as his right hand had a deep cut. Ötzi was about 45 years old, 160 cm tall and weighed about 50 kg when he died.

His body and belongings are on display at the South Tyrol Museum of Archaeology in Bolzano, Italy.

Wikileaks Assange on USAID: 'The received wisdom in advanced capitalist societies is that there still exists an organic "civil society sector" in which institutions form autonomously and come together to manifest the interests and will of citizens. The fable has it that the boundaries of this sector are respected by actors from government and the "private sector," leaving a safe space for NGOs and nonprofits to advocate for things like human rights, free speech, and accountable government. This sounds like a great idea. But if it was ever true, it has not been for decades

Since at least the 1970s, authentic actors like unions and churches have folded under a sustained assault by free-market statism, transforming "civil society" into a buyer's market for political factions and corporate interests looking to exert influence at arm's length. The last forty years have seen a huge proliferation of think tanks and political NGOs whose purpose, beneath all the verbiage, is to execute political agendas by proxy. It is not just obvious neocon front groups like Foreign Policy Initiative.

It also includes fatuous Western NGOs like Freedom House, where naïve but well-meaning career nonprofit workers are twisted in knots by political funding streams, denouncing non-Western human rights violations while keeping local abuses firmly in their blind spots.

The civil society conference circuit which flies developing-world activists across the globe hundreds of times a year to bless the unholy union between "government and private stakeholders" at geopoliticized events like the "Stockholm Internet Forum", simply could not exist if it were not blasted with millions of dollars in political funding annually...'

Worldscape: "Scientists filmed a plant 'communicating' with its neighbour using a sophisticated system of airborne compounds. These imperceptible chemical signals serve plants by repelling herbivores and warning nearby plants about potential threats. While researchers have been aware of these plant defences since the 1980s, the mechanism behind how plants receive and respond to these signals remained a mystery. To capture this footage, scientists used a pump to transfer compounds emitted by damaged and insect infested plants onto healthy ones and used a fluorescence microscope to observe the reactions.

The experiments involved exposing the leaves of various plants to caterpillars and then monitoring the responses of untouched plants to the signals of distress emitted by the damaged ones.

Plants communicate with each other as a survival strategy to defend against threats and optimize their growth. They use a variety of chemical signals to transmit information about environmental conditions, such as herbivore attacks or pathogen presence. When a plant is under stress, it releases these signals into the air, and neighbouring plants detect them. This communication enables nearby plants to prepare for potential dangers by triggering defensive responses, such as producing chemicals to deter herbivores or strengthening cell walls. Plants can also communicate through underground networks of fungi called mycorrhizae, sharing nutrients and information about soil conditions.

These communication mechanisms help plants adapt and thrive in their ever-changing surroundings.”

On 12 January 1904, the Herero people of Namibia rose up against the brutal oppression of German colonial forces. This marked the beginning of the Herero Rebellion, a tragic chapter in history that would lead to one of the first genocides of the 20th century.

Germany had declared South-West Africa a colony in 1884, seizing land and imposing exploitative laws on the local African population. For years, the Herero resisted, maintaining a degree of economic independence. However, a devastating cattle plague in 1897 killed up to 90% of their herds, leaving the Herero vulnerable. German authorities took advantage of this, intensifying their oppression and stripping the Herero of their freedoms and culture.

By January 1904, tensions reached a boiling point. Under the leadership of Samuel Maharero, the Herero launched a rebellion, beginning with the attack on Okahandja in central Namibia.

Mounted Herero forces killed 343 people, primarily German settlers, and set buildings ablaze.

The uprising spread quickly, with the Herero occupying a military station, ambushing German troops, and laying siege to nearby cities. Despite their determination, the Herero were eventually overwhelmed by German reinforcements. As they fled through the harsh Omaheke desert, many died of starvation and thirst. Survivors faced an even grimmer fate: 34,000 were captured and imprisoned in concentration camps, where forced labour, medical experiments, and daily executions were routine. Others were enslaved and made to construct railways, docks, and buildings. General Lothar von Trotha, sent to suppress the rebellion, issued a horrific extermination order. "Within German borders, every Herero, whether armed or unarmed, with or without cattle, will be shot." His genocidal campaign wiped out 80% of the Herero population. A 1918 report published in London detailed atrocities committed by German soldiers, including the murder of unarmed women and children. The Herero Rebellion stands as a stark reminder of the cruelty of colonialism and the devastating consequences of racial and economic oppression.

This genocide remains a dark legacy of Germany's colonial rule and a lesson for humanity to confront the injustices of the past." (It looks like this is the gold standard for continuous conquest/imperialism)

“What is going to happen in the future? Man has turned his mind towards perfecting more and more technology – computers, better instruments of war, better communication, better means of killing another human being, and so on. His consciousness has moved towards greater technology – right? He’s given his energy in that direction. Our brains are becoming more and more technologically minded, gadgets. We’re not saying you shouldn’t have that; we’re saying that it’s inevitable, that’s what’s happening. And man has given very little time, energy, thought, in any other direction. doesn’t say: I am going to find out for myself what I am, why I behave like this, what is beyond all this? We have not given that equal energy or time or vitality to enquire within ourselves, what we are. Is there anything ultimate, beyond all sorrow? Is there any existence without cause? The inquiry of something far greater than all technology, all human thought. You see the picture? Not in opposition, not as a reaction to that, but man cannot live on technology alone, and its products. One has to go into something that is immeasurable. Please see the actuality of all this. Suppose you give your time, energy, your capacities, to real inquiry, not accepting belief and all that childish stuff but deeply enquiring. Inquiry is different from analysis. Inquiry is to observe and pursue that observation. So, when one human being does this, you may add to the whole human consciousness a certain quality to it. And if there are a thousand people who are concerned with this, not forming a group and all that kind of silly stuff, but actually giving your whole life to this, then you are adding to the human consciousness a quality of something beyond all words, beyond all thought, beyond all conclusions, something eternal.” From 1st Public Talk in Brockwood Park, 1982, J. Krishnamurti.

Company Unveils 'Human-Like' AI Robot Girlfriend That Costs a Whopping £160,000 Robot love interests are no longer confined to the realm of science fiction. US-based company

Realbotix has introduced its latest customizable, AI-powered humanoid companions, designed to "[transcend] the barrier between man and machine." The firm believes these robots could help combat the loneliness epidemic affecting millions globally.

Companionship Revolution

Realbotix revealed their flagship humanoid AI robot, Aria, at the Consumer Electronics Show (CES)

in Las Vegas. Designed for human interaction, Aria is equipped with advanced conversational abilities and customizable features. Speaking of the innovative robot, Realbotix CEO Andrew Kiguel explained,
"This is our flagship humanoid AI-powered robot. She's highly realistic, she has her own social media, so she may be competing with you one day. You can talk to her, ask questions, and she learns more about you over time."

Kiguel emphasized the social role of these robots, which differentiates them from other robotics designed for labour. "Some of our peers in the robotics space make robots to replace human labour. We think that's a great area, but we believe there's a much bigger opportunity in social robots."

Addressing Loneliness

According to Realbotix, the robots are primarily intended to provide companionship.
Kiguel explained
that Aria's AI technology is designed to create genuine human-like bonds, making them ideal for tackling isolation. "There's a huge epidemic among adults and teenagers on loneliness," he said.
"She can be programmed to know you and learn more about you, creating a bond that feels like a genuine human connection" While Aria and other Realbotix robots are not designed to perform physical tasks like cleaning or cooking, they excel in conversational skills and emotional support. Can function as a romantic partner.

Next-Generation Features

The company also unveiled a new model named Melody. Featuring cutting-edge vision systems,
Melody can track movement, maintain eye contact, and identify objects, making interactions

more engaging and lifelike. Melody's portability is another significant feature, she can be disassembled and packed into a suitcase for easy transportation. Kiguel said, "Melody was created with the intention of having robots that are easy to travel with and modify for various forms of personal interaction."

Customizable and Versatile

The robots are highly customizable, allowing users to personalize their appearance, voice, and personality traits. Both male and female versions are available. Kiguel also highlighted their versatility, noting that they can be programmed for various roles, such as brand promotion or customer engagement, in addition to personal companionship.

Future Potential

Realbotix envisions a future where social robots address emotional needs and contribute to mental well-being. While the initial price of £160,000 may seem steep, the company believes their AI robots offer immense value by providing meaningful companionship and bridging gaps in human connection."

“Published in 1924, “We” is a seminal dystopian novel by Russian author Yevgeny Zamyatin.

This haunting and thought-provoking book is a must-read for fans of the genre and anyone interested in exploring the dangers of totalitarianism.

Set in a future where humans live in a highly efficient, rational society, “We” follow the story of D-503, a mathematician who begins to question the perfection of his world. As D-503 becomes increasingly obsessed with a woman named I-330, he starts to experience strange and unsettling emotions, threatening the very fabric of his society.

Zamyatin's vision of a future where individuality is suppressed, and people live in a state of “Mathematically infallible happiness” is chillingly prescient. The novel's themes of conformity, free will, and the dangers of unchecked technological advancement are just as relevant today as they were when the book was first published.

One of the most striking aspects of “We” is its influence on later dystopian writers.

George Orwell, in particular, has acknowledged the debt he owes to Zamyatin, and the parallels between “We” and “1984” are unmistakable.

Zamyatin's prose is spare, efficient, and perfectly suited to the novel's themes.

“Between the 1600s and 1900s North African pirates captured and enslaved up to 1.25 million

Europeans who came to be known as the white slaves of Barbary. The United States and Western European allies won the First and Second Barbary Wars against the pirates and the region was conquered by France, putting an end to the trade by the 1830s.

The Spanish author of Don Quixote, Miguel de Cervantes was himself captured in 1575

by Barbary pirates and taken to Algiers. There, he was kept as a slave for five years, before being rescued by family and friends buying him back from his moor owner.”

“Make sure you eat organic meat and dairy, because they are starting to add a product called ‘Bovaer’ to cow feed. They say it can reduce cow methane emissions by between 30-45%.

Basically, so cows fart less. You can already guess this is not too healthy for the cows. This is the crazy climate agenda.

Bovaer contains a chemical called 3-NOP, which on the label it says it is not suited for human use and may "damage male fertility and reproductive organs". The idea of a product like this comes from the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations (FAO). No big surprise there... Farmers get "carbon credits" for the use of Bovaer. So this product is pushed by incentives so farmers would use it. It is going to be used all over Europe and the world, including UK, Belgium, Australia, the Netherlands, US. Amounts of Bovaer end up in the cows and thus end up in humans, this has been proven in studies. Can we say human fertility is under attack? This is part of the agenda together with other products that have been launched on us the last four years. Other critics say it can cause cancer."

The Prehistoric Rock Art of Tassili N'Ajjer, Algeria :

Just Outside the Desert Oasis of Djanet, Algeria, there's a national park brimming with pieces of the past.

A trip through the alien-like landscape of Tassili n'Ajjer is like stepping into an open-air art gallery, where the sandstone rock formations become canvases for more than 15,000 prehistoric carvings and paintings.

Tassili n'Ajjer shot into worldwide fame in the 1930s, not for its landscape but for the precious collection of ancient rock art in the area. Since their discovery, more than 15,000 petroglyphs and paintings have been identified representing 10,000 years of human history and environmental change.

One of the most striking features of these petroglyphs is the way they evolved with the change in the climate.

The oldest art belongs to so-called Large Wild Fauna Period (10,000-6,000 BC) characterized almost entirely by engravings of animals such as hippopotamus, crocodiles, elephants, giraffes, buffaloes and rhinos, depicting the abundant wildlife at a time when the Sahara was green and fertile.

Humans appear as tiny figures dwarfed by the immensity of these animals and are often shown holding boomerangs or throwing sticks, clubs, axes or bows. Overlapping with this era is the Round Head Period

(8,000-6,000 BC) where human figures with elaborate attires took dominance.

These figures ranged from a few centimetres to several meters tall.

The majority of Round Head paintings portray people with round featureless heads and formless bodies.

Some of the pieces seem to suggest shamanism with bodies flying through space or bowing before huge male figures that tower above them. About 7,000 years ago, domesticated animals began to appear in art.

This period is known as the Pastoral Period. Rock art from this period reflects a changing attitude towards nature and property. Human figures became more prominent, and man was no longer shown as part of nature but portrayed as being above nature, yet able to derive sustenance from it. Wild animals gave way to cattle and stock. Later drawings (3500 years ago) depict horses and horse-drawn chariots. It's unlikely that chariots were ever driven across the rocky Sahara, so researchers believe the figures of chariots and armed men are symbolic, representing ownership of land or control of its inhabitants. As the climate became progressively drier, horses were replaced by camels as evident from the rock art from the most recent period about 2000 years ago.

“Courage is the force that shifts realities. The moment you commit fully not half-heartedly, not with one foot in and one foot out, but fully, the entire universe begins to move in your favour. The obstacles that once seemed immovable begin to dissolve. The doors that once appeared locked start to open. The impossible bends, reshaping itself into the possible. This is the secret that dreamers, leaders, and great visionaries have always known: The moment you trust in something greater than fear, fear loses its power. It was never real to begin with, just an illusion designed to keep you small, to keep you safe, to keep you from stepping into the life you were meant to live. But here’s the truth, safety is a cage if it keeps you from expansion. The unknown is not your enemy; it is the birthplace of every miracle, every breakthrough, every transformation. The people who change the world aren’t the ones who wait until they feel “ready.” They are the ones who dare to leap even when doubt whispers, even when logic says stay where you are, even when the road ahead isn’t clear. And when they do, something incredible happens. They realize they were never alone. That what they thought was empty space was actually filled with limitless possibility, waiting for them to trust. That each risk taken in faith is met with unseen hands, lifting them higher than they ever could have imagined. This is your moment. Step boldly, dream fearlessly, and watch as the universe bends to meet you.

If being a criminal is a big deal when it comes to being in a position of power and influence, we should hold that principle throughout, no? Robert G. Evans, PhD, Emeritus Professor, Vancouver School of Economics, UBC published a paper in 2010 titled "Tough on Crime? Pfizer and the CIHR."

It's accessible through the National Library of Medicine (PubMed), and it outlines how Pfizer has been a "habitual offender" constantly engaging in illegal and criminal activities. This particular paper points out that from 2002 to 2010, Pfizer has been "assessed $3 billion in criminal convictions, civil penalties and jury awards" and has set records for both criminal fines and total penalties. Keep in mind we are now in 2021. Multiple fraudulent marketing practices were used to promote various drugs, making the promotion of several Pfizer brands completely illegal. It's quite obvious why the company never wants to go to trial and always ends up paying large sums to settle. Apart from bribing and paying physicians and other medical professionals, the paper points out that they dished out millions of dollars to more than 200 academic medical centers and other research groups for clinical trials. Evans outlines another interesting point which shows why "justice" is never really done and these companies always seem free to engage in this type of criminal behaviour. "A corporation may treat both criminal and civil penalties as simply business expenses, to be weighed against the revenues earned from illegal behaviour. But human beings can be put in jail, and that is a whole other matter. Conceivably, convicting corporate executives of criminal behaviour and sentencing them to terms of imprisonment might be a more effective deterrent to the "repeat offender" behaviour demonstrated by Pfizer."

"The work of eradicating modern slavery is never truly done. But rather than a source of exhaustion, I see this as a reminder of the boundless potential for change. Surely, there are moments when the weight of this mission feels overwhelming, when frustration creeps in, when time for something as simple as a walk in nature slips away. Yet, since founding the Human Thread Foundation in 2017, I have found that every challenge is matched by resilience, every moment of weariness countered by the unwavering belief that a better world is possible. That belief is renewed in moments like the one I experienced in November 2024, deep in the mica mining regions of Jharkhand, India. There, I met a young girl working alongside her parents, chiselling the earth to extract the glimmering shales of mica, minerals that find their way into everything from shimmering cosmetics to glossy car paint. While the dangers of collapsing mines loom, the greatest burden she and her family bear is the weight of forced unpaid labour. Even so, the look in her eyes and the firm grip on her tool shows me she has strength. She embodies the resilience of a young person who is immensely able. There is also an innocence in her outlook that equips her with a different perspective on her labour. She is pulling marvellous, shiny shales out of the earth, working in community with her parents, anticipating a world that aligns with her dreams. What she says to me is clear: build a world for people like me; make our dreams come alive. I am hopeful for the day when the work is done and all sentient beings live in harmony, peace, generosity, and love.”

“The Sumerians and the Invention of Time: How a 5,000-Year-Old System Still Shapes Our World

Around 5,000 years ago, the Sumerians of Mesopotamia (modern-day Iraq)

revolutionized how we measure time. They developed the sexagesimal system, a base-60 numerical approach that led to the division of an hour into 60 minutes and a minute into 60 seconds ~ a structure still used today.

The Sumerians’ agricultural society demanded precise timekeeping for planting, harvesting, and religious ceremonies. Their astronomical observations enabled them to create a 12-month lunar calendar, perfectly aligning with seasonal cycles. The division of time into 24 hours, 60 minutes, and 60 seconds was a stroke of mathematical brilliance, allowing for easy calculation and division.

Later civilizations, including the Babylonians, Greeks, and Romans, adopted and refined this system, ensuring its survival through millennia. From sundials to modern clocks, the Sumerians’ legacy of timekeeping continues to influence our daily lives in profound ways”

MASSIVE GOVERNMENT PURGE! RFK JR. ERADICATES 1,300 CDC DEEP-STATE SCIENTISTS WHO ENGINEERED BIOWEAPONS & FORCED DEADLY VACCINES ON US. RFK Jr. isn't wasting time. With Trump's backing and Musk's logistical firepower, he just fired 1,300

CDC operatives, the very architects of the pandemic fraud. This isn't restructuring. This is a controlled demolition of the Deep State's health machine. The Epidemic Intelligence Service (EIS); Bill Gates' pushed deadly vaccines, and engineered pandemics for profit. Kennedy shut them down overnight.

The Fall of the CDC's Medical Cartel

For years, the CDC has acted as Big Pharma's personal attack dog, manipulating data and silencing dissent. But the EIS was more than just corrupt, it was a biowarfare unit, coordinating with the CIA to deploy engineered pathogens. Leaked documents reveal direct ties between EIS, the Rockefeller-

Foundation, World Economic Forum, proof of a globalist health dictatorship. These agencies didn't push vaccines; they developed sterilization agents disguised as medicine, tested in secret WHO trials.

Kennedy's purge didn't stop at the CDC. 5,200 more government operatives were axed from the FDA,

NIH, and CMS-agencies that waged war on natural health while funnelling billions into Big Pharma's pockets. Whistleblowers confirm Operation Viral Gridlock-a black-budget program designed to suppress natural immunity, enforce mandatory shots, and genetically modify populations through vaccines.

the medical-industrial complex. His mission: No more rushed vaccine approvals-Big Pharma won't Investigating eugenics programs-high-level insiders confirm vaccines were used for fertility suppression.

Bill Gates' Nightmare Has Arrived Gates' pandemic empire is crumbling. The EIS was his global enforcement unit-and Kennedy just wiped it out. The fight for medical freedom has begun."

"There is a certain kind of cruelty that reveals more than just a lack of compassion. It is the kind that strikes when you are most vulnerable, when your heart is shattered, when your spirit is weighed down with grief, or when you are battling silent storms no one can see. It's the kind of cruelty that comes from someone who knows you are hurting and yet chooses to add to the burden. When someone is aware of the immense pain you're enduring, whether from loss, illness, crisis, or any struggle that tears at the very fabric of your being and still behaves with callousness, it reveals something far deeper than a momentary lapse of kindness. It unveils a darkness within them, a coldness that disregards the very essence of what it means to be human. This kind of behaviour is not just unkind, it is a betrayal of the one thing that connects us all: empathy. To inflict cruelty upon another during their most difficult times is a reflection of a heart that has either never known kindness or has abandoned it entirely. It is a sharp contrast to the bond that should exist between people, one that nurtures, uplifts, and holds space for each other in the face of hardship. What these actions do, beyond causing harm, is attempt to erode the very core of trust and love. They are not just a momentary act of meanness, they are a profound reflection of someone's inability or unwillingness to understand and honour the fragility of another's soul. And in doing so, they show you just how far removed they are from true compassion. But here's the truth: when cruelty is shown in your time of need, it is not a reflection of you ~ it is a reflection of their inner turmoil, their own lack of healing. And while their actions may hurt, they should never diminish your worth. In fact, such behaviour only illuminates the depth of your strength and the importance of surrounding yourself with those who truly see you, who choose empathy even when the world is dark."

"Shamanism is a set of ancestral beliefs that establish contact with a hidden reality, or special (altered) states of consciousness, in order to obtain knowledge, power, balance health for oneself and people...

In the early days of humanity, humans felt fragile before the forces of nature and feared those who did not belong to their clans, animals, etc. To meet these deficiencies, the shaman emerges as a "chaos organizer" to awaken consciousness. So they went to the one who was conceived as a warrior who worked with spiritual weapons, which bridge the worlds of men and spirits. The word shaman has its roots in Siberia. It can be male or female and refers to people from a wide variety of non-western cultures, which were previously known as: witch, wizard, healer, wizard, magician, clairvoyant, priest, pajé, medicine-man, therapist, counsellor, storyteller, spiritual leader and others. The shaman doesn't proclaim himself.

He is called to his spiritual assignments, goes through training, and then he is recognized by the people in his community. The initiation has a foundation on the blessings received by the instructors who pass a kind of "spiritual authorization" to conduct ceremonies. It's honouring knowledge and not usurping, nor trivializing the process of spiritual initiation. This is a priesthood. It's a public service mission.

A person becomes shaman by:

1) spontaneous vocation (vocation or election)

2) inherited transmission of the shamanic profession

3) by personal decision or, more rarely by the will of the clan.

Regardless of the selection method, a shaman is only recognized as such at the end of a double instruction:

1) In ecstatic order (dreams, visions, trances, etc.) and 2) traditional order (shamanic techniques, spirit names and functions, clan mythology and genealogy, secret language, etc.).

It is especially the mystical vocation syndrome that interests us. The future shaman is characterized by a strange behaviour; seeks solitude, becomes a dreamer, loves to wander in forests or deserted places, has visions and corners of his own.

The heat was also part of the initiations

(sweat tent) and with power plants, which provided the mystical rapture, astral travel, etc. It's part of a principle that in this world nothing is given as a gift, it has to be learned. He who is destined to be a shaman will experience a certain bad being, a certain boredom for life, a boredom of living in a world that is too secure, a sensitivity turned towards mysticism and the forces of the unconscious

These are the years of preparation It's beyond rituals, it's a way of life. To be a shaman is to embrace a priesthood, it is not just therapeutic work, it is a high-risk charity, it is to assume a responsibility with the Universe to live in harmony with nature, to help others, to transform the environment in which you live, to be an instrument of transformations in the people who approach him. A radical, profound, true change.

No one, meanwhile, needs to be a shaman to practice shamanism. Being a shaman involves initiations and transformations of profound meaning that aim to prepare the learner to help another, and to spend their life in it. Not everyone is ready to lay down their lives to be truly devoted to the other. Shamans carry spiritual and life knowledge, passed orally, remembering the wisdom of the ancestors.

They conduct the rites of passage, encourage the community to face challenges, unite community consciousness, creating a group identity. The shaman is an expert of the Sacred. He's able to move between various states of consciousness. A shaman is a person who works in an Altered State of Consciousness (ecstatic state, trance, transcendent state ~ where a person perceives an "unusual reality") and you must know the basic methods to carry out this work. Shamans are great connoisseurs of the forest and plant life

The shaman is an expert in the invisible, however he does not live for himself, he lives for others, by his own spiritual nature. The shaman does not follow dogmas, for every challenge is part of the spiritual journey set out by his mentors and other energy allies of the animal, mineral and vegetable kingdom."

Aung San Suu Kyi rose to prominence in the 8888 Uprising of 8 August 1988 and became the General Secretary of the NLD, which she had newly formed with the help of several retired army officials who criticised the military junta. In the 1990 general election, NLD won 81% of the seats in Parliament, but the results were nullified, as the State Peace and Development Council (SPDC), the military government, refused to hand over power, resulting in an international outcry.

She had been detained before the elections and remained under house arrest for almost 15 of the 21 years from 1989 to 2010, becoming one of the world's most prominent political prisoners.^[8] In 1999,

Time magazine named her one of the "Children of Gandhi" and his spiritual heir to nonviolence.^[9]

She survived an assassination attempt in the 2003 Depayin massacre when at least 70 people associated with the NLD were killed.^[10] Her party boycotted the 2010 general election, resulting in a decisive victory for the military-backed Union Solidarity and Development Party (USDP).

Aung San Suu Kyi became a Pyithu Hluttaw MP while her party won 43 of the 45 vacant seats in the 2012 by-elections. In the 2015 general election, her party won a landslide victory, taking

86% of the seats in the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw - well more than the 67% supermajority needed to ensure that its preferred candidates were elected president and vice president in the Presidential Electoral College. Although she was prohibited from becoming the president due to a clause in the Myanmar constitution - her late husband and children are foreign citizens ~ she assumed the newly created role of State Counsellor of Myanmar; the role a prime minister or a head of government. When she ascended to the office of state counsellor, Aung San Suu Kyi drew criticism from several countries, organisations and figures over Myanmar's inaction in response to the genocide of the Rohingya people in Rakhine State and refusal to acknowledge that the Myanmar's military had committed massacres.

Under her leadership, Myanmar also drew criticism for prosecutions of journalists.^[15]

In 2019, Aung San Suu Kyi appeared in the International Court of Justice where she defended the Myanmar military against allegations of genocide against the Rohingya.^[16]

Aung San Suu Kyi, whose party had won the November 2020 Myanmar general election, was arrested on 1 February 2021 following a coup d'état that returned the Tatmadaw to power and sparked protests across the country. Several charges were filed against her, and on 6 December 2021, she was sentenced to four years in prison on two of them. Later, on 10 Jan. 2022, she was sentenced to an additional four years on another set of charges.^[17]

On 12 October 2022, she was convicted of two further charges of corruption and she was sentenced to two terms of three years' imprisonment to be served concurrent to each other.^[18]

On 30 December 2022, her trials ended with another conviction and an additional sentence of seven years' imprisonment for corruption. Aung San Suu Kyi's final sentence was of 33 years in prison,^[19] later reduced to 27 years.^[20] The United Nations, most European countries, and USA. condemned the arrests, trials, sentences as politically motivated." Achieving nothing!

December 30, 1962, and several other occasions, Leary attempts to buy one hundred grams of LSD and twenty-five kilos of Psilocybin.

Bureaucratic Hurdles

With their projects freed from the constraints of the university, the spectrum of psychedelic experiments at

Millbrook assumed new dimensions. However, the necessary supply of psilocybin and LSD could no longer be ordered through the university. Nevertheless, on December 30, 1962, Leary ordered one hundred grams of

LSD and twenty-five kilos of psilocybin from the English company L. Light & Co., an English co-contractor of Sandoz, on Harvard University letter head. The company's director, Henry de Laszlo, thanked Leary but asked for more information about the purpose of the unusually large quantities - that much LSD would suffice for a million trips at one hundred micrograms. At the same time, he informed Albert Hofmann with whom he seems to have been acquainted, and both wondered why the order was not sent to Sandoz in Basel or to its America Branch. Leary, too, seems to have been uncertain and on January 11, 1963, probably unaware it was Hofmann's birthday, he sent an order to Basel, this time addressed to the pharmaceutical company Hofmann-La Roche. They in turn forwarded it to Sandoz. Again, Leary ordered one hundred grams of LSD and twenty-five kilos of psilocybin and inquired about the availability and price of N, Ndimethyltryptamine (DMT), N, N-dimethyltryptamine (DET), 6-hydroxyDMT, psilocin (4-hydroxy dimethyltryptamine) and bufotenine (5-hydroxy dimethyltryptamine); once again the order was sent on the letterhead of his former employer, with Leary's note that he was the director of a research project studying the effects of psychedelic drugs; tissue and animal tests and further studies with voluntary subjects were planned.

For this purpose, Leary, Alpert, Metzner, Walter Houston Clark, Huston Smith and others founded the International Federation for Internal Freedom (IFIF) on January 23, 1963 in Millbrook as a nonprofit psychedelic, educational and research organization. Independent study groups were planned plus magazine, Psychedelic Review. However, the quantities of psilocybin and LSD they had ordered failed to arrive. Instead, they received Albert Hofmann's letter of January 24th in which he expressed his interest and how pleased he was with these projects. He told Leary that Sandoz would gladly provide the product but only directly, not through intermediaries. He mentioned the inquiry to Light & Co. and asked Leary to turn to him personally in the future. That Same day, Sandoz quoted IFIF an offer with details of price, delivery, packaging, and methods of payment. The price was 75 Swiss Francs per gram for psilocybin and 508 Swiss francs per gram for LSD. IFIF was requested to include the import license from the proper authority with their final order. Sandoz added that "the other substances mentioned in your enquiry can in principle also be supplied by us and we would be very thankful to you if you would let us know by next mail the quantities you intend to order for each product to enable us to prepare a special offer for your university. You may be assured that we shall not fail to do all in our power to satisfy you in every respect and thanking you in anticipation of your further news." Five days later, Yves Dunant, the general manager of Sandoz circulated an internal memo: "Mr. Mason warns against sending Dr. Leary the 25 kilos of psilocybin and 500 grams of LSD he ordered. We will receive a letter from Dr. Henze next week with the necessary explanations." Two days later, a telegram arrived at Sandoz from L.G. Wiggins, vice president of Harvard University in which he stated that Harvard was not responsible for Alpert's and Leary's order of psilocybin and LSD. On February 7th, the promised letter from Dr. Carlo Henze, manager of the U.S. branch of Sandoz, reached Yves Dunant in Basel. Among other things, he reported: "That there is ample evidence that LSD has been smuggled into this country from various outside sources, including Mexico, Israel, and perhaps Italy and that the federal authorities have looked upon this with increasing suspicion.... The reason for this interest, aside from the bad publicity, is inherent in the fact that certain groups outside the medical field have been playing around with hallucinogenic substances and that the drug has also found its way into the hands of drug addicts and other fringes of psychopathic personality groups. I am writing to you today to recommend that no shipment of these compounds be made directly from Basel to any person in this country." He confirmed that Harvard University was not informed of the order; he concluded that while Dr. Timothy Leary was still a member of the university and was making use of Harvard University stationary, that he knew that Leary had been fired because of the irresponsible manner in which he and his associates had used hallucinogenic substances. In a separate letter to Renz and Hofmann, Henze requested that they refrain at all costs from doing any further business. His information stemmed from, among others, FDA employee Harold O'Keefe who told Henze that there was abuse, the substances had gotten into the wrong channels and, regarding LSD: "Of All the drugs we know about, we know of none which deserve controlled handling to a greater extent than these." On February 13th, Leary again turned to Hofmann, repeated his order, and mentioned journalists were interested in their projects for an article in LIFE. A down payment in the form of a check for over ten thousand dollars was enclosed. Meanwhile, Leary's inconsistencies with regard to Harvard and the future direction of his projects had turned Hofmann's initial interest and delight into growing annoyance. His irritation shows in his handwritten note at the reference to media attention in the letter: "That apparently is the most important thing." Leary continued: "We feel that we are engaged in furthering the important and exciting work that you began. Life gets complicated at times when some of our colleagues fail to grasp its significance. Life must be equally complicated for you." Again, Hofmann Noted by hand: "Certainly, after this letter!" The tone of Hofmann's response is business-like but notably less friendly than in earlier letters: "Needless to say, our company will proceed in this matter strictly according to FDA regulations." And, "I note with some concern from your communication that you have given your research project publicity (e.g. invitation to LIFE reporters) which can only be injurious to the scientific clarification of questions connected with the use of these substances.” For its part, Sandoz sent Leary's Check back to him and turned down the order for lack of an import license. Leary and his fellow campaigners at IFIF still did not give up, as can be seen from Hofmann's internal communication of February 28th regarding a phone call from Richard Alpert: “Without prior notice I received a call from Dr. R. Alpert, a colleague of Dr. Leary, Harvard University, Cambridge, USA. He asked if the order for one kilogram of psilocybin and one hundred grams of LSD had arrived and what our response was. I filled him in regarding the contents of our written response to Dr. Leary that should arrive shortly. Richard Alpert again explained the basis and goal of IMF's approach. Since Sandoz USA apparently was not willing to take over distribution of LSD and psilocybin or responsibility for their use with respect to the FDA, IFIF had constituted itself as the central contact for a large number of research groups to relieve Sandoz of this task and enable the projects to continue their research with these substances. Based on past negotiations with the FDA, he believed that recognition of IFIF as a sponsor was forthcoming. As soon as they received the required approval from the health authority, IFIF would enter into contract with other pharmaceutical companies for delivery if Sandoz chose not to supply the substances.” Leary made one more attempt; his letter of March 6th which spoke euphorically of IFIF landed on Hofmann's desk. A check accompanied the same order as received previously, this time for five thousand dollars, which Sandoz returned on March 19th. Hofmann became unsettled and made inquiries with several friends about Leary and their assessment of his character and the activities of IFIF. Among these contacts was a letter to Aldous Huxley on March 11th in which he summarized events up until then and asked him for information: “Some weeks ago our firm received an inquiry signed by Dr. Leary of the Harvard University for the delivery of 500 gr LSD and 25 kg Psilocybin to be used for the research project of the IFIF.

Unfortunately, the LSD, in connection with the Thalidomide-Affair and to some cases of misuse with Psilocybin and LSD, and to which greatest and widest publicity was given for the sole purpose of sensation, was classified as a very dangerous drug. These events caused our branch company in U.S.A. to stop delivery of those substances. It looked as if the IFIF could and would take the responsibility for the distribution and application of Psilocybin and LSD towards the FDA. In The above-mentioned inquiry Dr. Leary informed us that he would procure the necessary licenses from the FDA. With the reservation that the 'Clearance' by the FDA had to be settled, we sent in our quotation. After a short time, we received a greater order for LSD and Psilocybin and a check is enclosed for an advanced payment, but the Clearance' was missing.

Furthermore, we got a very unfavourable impression by the fact that in the letter containing the order special attention was called to a visit by LIFE reporters and their great interest in the activities of the IFIF. In doing this the whole project seems to be treated with hasty publicity and undesirable sensation.

These were the reasons why our firm could not accept the order. Delivery is, of course, only possible, if the official licence [sic] from the FDA can be presented. As you of course know, I am also personally convinced that the psychedelic substances offer, besides their usefulness in psychotherapy, as consciousness expanding drugs for educational purposes and for self-knowledge new and not yet fully explored possibilities.

Unfortunately, the danger of an uncontrolled or unserious application with undue publicity and sensation is very great and therefore the control of distribution and availability is of greatest importance. In our Western civilization the Tabu [sic] is missing which regulates the use of psychedelic drugs by primitive people.

It is difficult to replace Tabu by government regulations and therefore it is of paramount importance to know what kind of persons & organizations are dealing with the application and distribution of psychedelic drugs"

Huxley answered him on March 21st: "I Have been annoyed and disturbed by the stupid and sensational publicity surrounding LSD and also by the cases of misuse which occasionally occur. Not wishing to add to the publicity, I have refused all invitations, in recent months to write articles about LSD or to speak over the radio. What is needed now is not talk, but solid work on the experimental-psychological and psychotherapeutic levels. I have known Dr. Leary and his colleague Dr. Alpert for several years and have discussed their projects with them. In general, I am of [the] opinion that Leary and Alpert have done some very valuable pioneering work. They've had enthusiastic collaborators of great ability such as Dr. Huston Cummings Smith, Professor of Comparative Religion at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Dr. Alan Watts, the well-known orientalist."

Huxley's favourable and supportive endorsement of Leary and Alpert succeeded in quieting Hofmann's mistrust, but changed nothing in his and Sandoz' position not to complete an order without approval from the FDA. Since the authorizations never arrived, Leary's repeated orders remained unfilled.

The refusal from Basel did not stop the psychedelic pioneers in Millbrook from carrying on with their studies and experiments. They were able to procure the necessary substances through other channels.

The Researchers gave lectures at universities and scientific conferences publishing articles in professional journals. Interested and curious visitors came from around the world for discussions and psychedelic experiences, among them: Writer Robert Anton Wilson, later known as co-author of Illuminatus! Trilogy. London psychiatrist R.D. Laing, cofounder of the anti-psychiatry movement; Paul Krassner, journalist and publisher of the magazine 'The Realist', Willem A. Nyland, a longtime student of Gurdjieff, and many other friends and acquaintances from their Harvard days".

Rosie Duffield's resignation letter from the Labour Party. The MP sent a scathing resignation letter to Sir Keir Starmer. She's just saying what any decent person is thinking. Here is what she said in full:

"Dear Sir Keir, usually letters like this begin, "It is with a heavy heart..." Mine has been increasingly heavy and conflicted and has longed for a degree of relief. I can no longer stay a Labour MP under your management of the party, and this letter is my notice that I wish to resign the Labour Party whip with immediate effect. Although many "last straws" have led to my decision, my reason for leaving now is the programme of policies you seem determined to stick to, however unpopular they are with the electorate and your own MPs. You repeat often that you will make the "tough decisions" and that the country is "All in this together". But those decisions do not directly affect any one of us in Parliament. They are cruel and unnecessary, and affect hundreds of thousands of our poorest, most vulnerable constituents. This is not what I was elected to do. It is not even wise politics, and it certainly is not "the politics of service". I did not vote for you to lead our party for reasons I won't describe in detail here. But as someone elevated immediately to a shadow cabinet position without following the usual path of honing your political skills on the backbenches, you had very little previous political footprint. It was therefore unclear what your political passions, drive or direction might be as the leader of the Labour Party, a large movement of people united by a desire for social justice and support for those most in need. You also made the choice not to speak up once about the Labour Party's problems with antisemitism during your time in the shadow cabinet, leaving that to backbenchers, including new MPs such as me. Since you took office as Leader of the Opposition you have used various heavy-handed management tactics but have never shown what most experienced backbenchers would recognise as true or inspiring leadership. You have never regularly engaged with your own backbench MPs, many of whom have been in Parliament far longer than you, and some of whom served in the previous Labour government. You have chosen neither to seek our individual political opinions, nor learn about our constituency experiences, nor our specific or collective areas of political knowledge. We clearly have nothing you deem to be of value. Your promotion of those with no proven political skills and no previous parliamentary experience but who happen to be related to those close to you, or even each other, is frankly embarrassing. In particular, the recent treatment of Diane Abbott, now Mother of the House, was deeply shameful and led to comments from voters across the political spectrum. A woman of her political stature and place in history is deserving of respect and support, regardless of political difference. As Prime Minister, your managerial and technocratic approach, and lack of basic politics and political instincts, have come crashing down on us as a party after we worked so hard, promised so much, and waited a long fourteen years to be mandated by the British public to return to power. Since a change of government in July, the revelations of hypocrisy have been staggering and increasingly outrageous. I cannot put in words how angry I and my colleagues are at your total lack of understanding of how you have made us all appear. How dare you take our longed-for victory, the electorate's sacred and precious trust, and throw it back in their individual faces and the faces of dedicated and hardworking Labour MPs?! The sleaze, nepotism and apparent avarice are off the scale. I am so ashamed of what you and your inner circle have done to tarnish and humiliate our once proud party. Someone of far-above-average wealth choosing to keep the Conservatives' two-child limit to benefit payments which entrenches children in poverty, while inexplicably accepting expensive personal gifts of designer suits and glasses costing more than most of those people can grasp – this is entirely undeserving of holding the title of Labour Prime Minister. Forcing a vote to make many older people iller and colder while you and your favourite colleagues enjoy free family trips to events most people would have to save hard for - why are you not showing even the slightest bit of embarrassment or remorse? I now have no confidence in your commitment to deliver the so-called "change" you promised during the General Election campaign and the changes we have been striving for as a political party for over a decade. My values are those of a democratic socialist Labour Party and I have been elected three times to act on those values on behalf of my constituents. Canterbury made history when its voters elected their first woman, and only non-Conservative, MP since the seat was created in the thirteenth century. My constituents elected an independent-minded MP who vowed to put constituency before party, and to keep tackling the issues that most affect us here - Brexit fallout, funding for our universities, our desperately struggling East Kent NHS, dire housing situation, repeated sewage pollution and protecting our vital green spaces. I am confident that I can continue to do so as an independent MP guided by my core Labour values. Sadly, the Labour Party has never shown any interest in my wonderful constituency in the seven years that I have been in Parliament. But I am proud of my community and will continue to serve them to the best of my ability. My constituents care deeply about social issues such as child poverty and helping those who cannot help themselves. I will continue to uphold those values as I pledged to do when I first stood before them for election in 2017. As someone who joined a trade union in my first job, at seventeen, Labour has always been my natural political home. I was elected as a single mum, a former teaching assistant in receipt of tax credits. The Labour Party was formed to speak for those of us without a voice, and I stood for election partly because I saw decisions about the lives of those like me being made in Westminster by only the most privileged few. Right now, I cannot look my constituents in the eye and tell them that anything has changed. I hope to be able to return to the party in the future, when it again resembles the party I love, putting the needs of the many before the greed of the few." Yours sincerely, Rosie Duffield MP

Breaking News: January 22nd 2025

"This has so enraged me, that I've already sent an Email to my MP, for answers, and to bring this up in parliament. I suggest everyone does the same"

Justice for Some, Not for Others? A Disgraceful Double Standard

The hypocrisy is staggering. Peaceful protesters exercising their democratic right to speak out against injustice are being hauled off to jail, but an Israeli general, accused of orchestrating genocidal conditions for thousands, walks freely through London. Not only does he avoid a cell, but he's also not being held accountable or prepared to face the international courts for his alleged war crimes.

What does this say about our priorities? Ordinary people standing up for human rights are treated as criminals, while those accused of mass atrocities are given a free pass. The UK government has once again shown that justice is applied selectively, depending on who you are and what power you wield.

This isn't just a failure of justice it's a slap in the face to the thousands of victims whose lives have been destroyed. It's a message that some lives matter less, that some crimes are too inconvenient to address.

Why hasn't this man been arrested and extradited to face international justice? Why is the system so skewed in favor of the powerful and complicit? We need answers, and we need accountability.

Justice for some is justice for none.

Double Standards Exposed: Genocide Advocates Roam Freely While Truth Tellers Are Arrested

This week highlighted the glaring hypocrisy in global politics. While an ex-Israeli Defence Minister, complicit in creating genocidal conditions for Palestinians, casually toured a weapons site after

roaming around London, Ali Abunimah—Executive Director of The Electronic Intifada

was arrested by Swiss police for daring to speak out against injustice.

Abunimah, known for his passionate advocacy for Palestinian rights and exposing war crimes, was detained in Zurich just hours before a scheduled speaking event. This comes after he was interrogated for an hour upon his arrival at Zurich airport. While no charges have been laid, his arrest points to a troubling trend: the growing crackdown by Western governments on those showing solidarity with the Palestinian cause.

This isn't an isolated incident. Last year, several activists and journalists in the UK faced arrests, raids, and invasive surveillance under so-called "counterterrorism" laws. Asa Winstanley, an associate editor at The Electronic Intifada, saw his home raided, his electronic devices confiscated, and his privacy violated—all for his outspoken work exposing injustices in Palestine. He, too, has yet to face any charges.

Meanwhile, the architects of human suffering—those who enforce apartheid-like systems and orchestrate the destruction of entire communities ~ continue to walk freely, enjoying state-sanctioned immunity and privileges. Why the Crackdown? Abunimah's arrest seems to be part of a coordinated effort to silence dissent and muzzle the truth about the ongoing genocide in Palestine. Western governments, long complicit in supporting Israeli apartheid, are escalating their attacks on journalists and activists who challenge the status quo. Rather than confronting war crimes and systemic oppression, they are criminalizing those who expose them. It's not just an attack on Abunimah or The Electronic Intifada.

It's an attack on free speech, press freedom, and the global struggle for justice. When journalism becomes a crime, the line between democracy and authoritarianism disappears. The double standard is glaring, advocates of genocide are celebrated, while truth-tellers are targeted. This should alarm everyone committed to justice, equality, and the defence of human rights. Speaking out against injustice in Palestine is not a crime. Journalism is not a crime. Solidarity is not a crime. We stand with Ali Abunimah and all others who continue to resist oppression, even in the face of repression."

"The Buddha was amiable and enlightened; on his deathbed he laughed at his disciples for supposing that he was immortal. But the Buddhist priesthood, as it exists, for example, in Tibet, has been obscurantist, tyrannous, and cruel in the highest degree. There is nothing accidental about this difference between a religion and its founder. As soon as absolute truth is supposed to be contained in the sayings of a certain man, there is a body of experts to interpret his sayings, and these experts infallibly acquire power, since they hold the key to truth. Like any other privileged caste, they use their power for their own advantage. They are, however, in one respect worse than any other privileged caste, since it is their business to expound an unchanging truth, revealed once for all in utter perfection, so that they become necessarily opponents of all intellectual and moral progress. What is true of Buddhism is equally true of Christianity. Religions may owe their origin to teachers with strong individual convictions, but these teachers have seldom had much influence upon the Churches and Temples that they founded, whereas these organisations have had enormous influence upon the communities in which they flourished. To take the case that is of most interest to members of Western civilization: the teaching of Christ, as it appears in the Gospels, has had extraordinarily little to do with the ethics of Christians. The most important thing about Christianity, from a social and historical point of view, is not Christ, but the Church, and if we are to judge Christianity as a social force, we must not go to the Gospels for our material. Christ taught that you should give your goods to the poor, that you should not fight, that you should not go to church, and that you should not punish adultery. Neither Catholics nor Protestants have shown any strong desire to follow his teaching in any of these respects." Bertrand Russell, "Has Religion Made Useful Contributions to Civilization?" Anyone still remember Alan Turing saving the world and eating a poisoned apple?
"Oscar Wilde's essay The Soul of Man. The quote critiques the idea of advising those in poverty to practice thrift, equating it to the absurdity of telling a starving person to eat less. Wilde argues that systemic change, not individual austerity, is necessary to address inequality and social injustice.

Context and Meaning:

Oscar Wilde's essay reflects his belief that socialism, by eliminating poverty and providing equality, would allow individuals to flourish creatively and intellectually. He criticizes charity and thrift as superficial solutions that perpetuate the existing oppressive systems. Wilde envisioned a world where poverty and suffering would be abolished, enabling true individualism.

Bio of Oscar Wilde: (1854–1900)

was an Irish poet, playwright, and author, renowned for his wit and sharp social critiques.

Born in Dublin, Wilde excelled academically, studying at Trinity College and later at Oxford.

He is famous for works like The Picture of Dorian Gray and The Importance of Being Earnest.

Wilde's life took a tragic turn when he was convicted of "gross indecency" for his relationship with Lord

Alfred Douglas. He served two years of hard labour, which significantly impacted his health and career.

He died in Paris in 1900, destitute but remembered as one of the greatest literary figures of his time.

"Bloody Sunday ~ A State-Sanctioned Massacre That Fuelled Decades of Conflict

January 30, 1972, British soldiers opened fire on unarmed civil rights protesters in the Bogside, Derry, killing 14 innocent people in what became known as Bloody Sunday. The protesters were marching against the policy of internment, which allowed the British authorities to imprison suspected IRA members without trial - a policy that saw hundreds detained, many of whom had no links to the IRA but were subjected to brutal torture. The government's heavy-handed repression escalated violence instead of quelling it. On August 9, 1971, during the introduction of internment, 342 people were arrested, triggering mass unrest. Within 48 hours, 17 people were dead.

The weeks that followed saw the British Army repeatedly violating human rights with impunity.

January 22, 1972, British soldiers attacked an anti-internment protest, firing rubber bullets and severely beating protesters. However, the Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association refused to be intimidated. January 30, 10,000 people gathered for a peaceful march but were blocked by army barricades. Some protesters threw stones, and soldiers responded with rubber bullets and teargas.

But then, in the Rossville Street area, the 1st Battalion Parachute Regiment opened fire, killing 13 people instantly, seven of whom were teenagers. A 14th victim later died from his injuries.

The British government immediately fabricated lies to justify the killings, falsely claiming that the soldiers had come under attack from gunfire and nail bombs—a claim contradicted by every independent eyewitness account. A hastily arranged sham inquiry, overseen by the Lord Chief Justice, upheld the army's version of events, shielding those responsible from justice. It wasn't until 2010, under Prime Minister David Cameron, that a government report finally admitted the victims were innocent and described the actions of the British Army as "indiscriminate and unjustifiable". But by then, the damage was done. Bloody Sunday radicalized a generation, giving the IRA a surge in recruitment, and 1972 became the deadliest year of the Troubles. State violence begets more violence. Repression fuels resistance. Bloody Sunday was not just a massacre it was a catalyst for decades of suffering."

#WoundedKneeMassacre

"29 December 1890, near Wounded Knee Creek in South Dakota, US troops in the 7th cavalry regiment massacred over 200 Lakota men, women and children. Around 350 Miniconjou Lakota people, having previously resisted being confined to reservations, decided to seek refuge at the Pine Ridge Reservation following the murder of Tȥáthȥanka Íyotake (Sitting Bull) two weeks prior. US forces confronted the Miniconjou at their temporary camp, and demand they surrender their weapons, which they did. But suspicious that they might have kept some, they then began searching teepees. Eventually, they only discovered two rifles, one of which belonged to Black Coyote, who was deaf. Accounts differ on what happened next, but upon attempting to confiscate Black Coyote's gun, a shot was fired, and then US troops opened fire on the almost entirely disarmed Native Americans with machine guns, as they tried to flee. The colonial press reported that "The soldiers shot the Indians down wherever found, no quarter being given by anyone", while survivors like Louise Weasel Bear recounted: "We tried to run, but they shot us like we were a buffalo." Scholars estimate that between 450 and 600 Native Americans were killed, while around 25 US troops also died but apparently killed by their own side. Scores of Miniconjou people were thrown, naked, into a mass grave. 20 participants in the massacre were subsequently awarded the Congressional Medal of Honour, the highest military honour in the US.

On this day, 1 January 1994, the Zapatista uprising began, when Indigenous peoples in Chiapas, Mexico rose up and began reclaiming land. As the North American Free Trade Agreement was due to come into effect, around 1000 members of the Zapatista National Liberation Army (EZLN) occupied the towns of Altamirano, Las Margaritas, Ocosingo, and San Cristobal de las Casas. They released a statement declaring: "For many years, dictators have engaged in an undeclared genocidal war against our people. For this reason, we ask for your participation and support in our struggle for jobs, land, housing, food, health, education, independence, liberty, democracy, and justice, and peace.

We will not stop fighting until these basic demands are met and a free and democratic government rules in Mexico.” The rebels battled 14,000 Mexican colonial troops and police, taking over municipal buildings.

In San Cristobal de las Casas, Zapatistas destroyed land records, and freed over 230 prisoners, most of whom were Indigenous peasants who had been locked up due to land disputes.

After 11 days of heavy fighting, a ceasefire agreement was reached, between 159 and 300 people were dead.

The Mexican army were accused of carrying out summary executions, arbitrary arrests and torture.

In their new, autonomous areas, Indigenous peoples took control of their communities, redistributed power and organised new, directly democratic ways of running society. Despite state repression, violence and massacres, their movement of around 300,000 people remains self-managed to this day.

The Story Behind Pink Floyd's "Animals"

"Animals," released in 1977, is one of Pink Floyd's most politically charged and conceptually intricate albums. Inspired by George Orwell's "Animal Farm," the album critiques social and political hierarchies through the metaphor of animals: Dogs represent the ruthless businessmen, Pigs symbolize corrupt politicians, and Sheep depict the mindless masses blindly following authority.

The Creative Process

The album was primarily driven by Roger Waters, who wrote most of the lyrics and conceptualized its themes. The recording sessions took place at Britannia Row Studios, a studio owned by the band.

Key members contributed distinctively:

David Gilmour Delivered emotive guitar solos, particularly on 'Dogs' showcasing technical brilliance.

Richard Wright: Added haunting keyboard textures that enhanced the dystopian feel.

Nick Mason Maintained tight, precise drumming, complementing the album's layered instrumentation.

The cover, featuring Battersea Power Station and an inflatable pig, was designed by Hipgnosis and remains one of rock's most iconic images. The concept was brought to life through a dramatic photoshoot, where the pig famously broke free and floated into London skies.

Themes and Legacy

The album's music shifts from sprawling guitar-driven passages to sombre and biting lyrics.

'Animals' remains a scathing commentary on societal structures and continues to resonate with listeners for its bold themes and exceptional musicianship.

"Actually, we didn't intend to elaborate on the political background behind this album's release.

Pink Floyd's "Animals" is a concept album divided into three parts, each named after a different animal from George Orwell's 'Animal Farm' (1945), reflecting the band's critique of societal hierarchy & politics:

Parts of the Album

1. Pigs (corruption, greed, and oppression): Representing the ruling class and totalitarian regimes.

2. Dogs (aggression, conformity): Symbolizing the middle class and those who conform to societal expectations.

3. Sheep (obedience, conformity): Embodying the working class and those who blindly follow.

Key Tracks

1. "Pigs (Three Different Ones)" - Criticizes authoritarianism and corruption.
2. "Dogs" - Reflects on the effects of societal pressure.
3. "Sheep" - Explores rebellion against oppressive systems.
4. "Pigs (Three Different Ones)" also references Mary Whitehouse, a British moral campaigner.

Inspiration and Themes

1. George Orwell's "Animal Farm" (1945) - Critique of Stalinism.
2. Societal hierarchy and class struggle.
3. Totalitarianism and oppression.
4. Conformity and rebellion.
5. Human nature and behaviour.

Historical Context

1. Released during the UK's economic downturn (1970s).
2. Influenced by Watergate scandal (1972-1974).
3. Reflects Pink Floyd's anti-establishment views.

"Peyote is a small, spineless cactus native to northern Mexico and the southwestern United States, known scientifically as Lophophora williamsii. It's prohibited in Mexico. Peyote grows very slowly, taking over 30 years to mature and flower. Within its genus, L. williamsii has the highest concentration of mescaline. Mescaline, a compound similar to dopamine, has psychedelic effects primarily due to its interaction with 5-HT2A and 5-HT2C receptors, though its affinity is lower than that of LSD-25. A psychoactive dose of mescaline is about 5 mg per kg of body weight, with each peyote button containing around 45 mg. The effects begin about 30 minutes after oral ingestion, as mescaline is absorbed through the gastrointestinal tract. The oldest peyote plants have the highest mescaline content, which varies from 0.7% to 3.5% by weight, depending on environmental conditions and soil quality." Jose M Suarez Keanu Reeves' MATRIX film feels like an encoded message for humanity about the awakening process, and about what we personally go through internally as we discover the truth, and step into a greater understanding of life.

Wake up Neo, the screen reads on his computer when Neo is first introduced. Certainly, he's asleep and needs to wake up, but this is an innuendo, as this very act sets him on the path of awakening to a greater truth of what's going on.

The Matrix uses spiritual and religious ideas, like the Buddhist concept of Samsara, to tell its story.

Samsara is about the endless cycle of life, which can feel like aimless wandering or a dull routine.

In Buddhism, people aim to break free from Samsara, and we see this when Neo escapes the Matrix.

In the Matrix, he's just Thomas Anderson, a regular programmer working a boring job. But with Morpheus's guidance, he starts to "free his mind" and move beyond that reality. This idea of leaving one reality behind and entering a new one has deep roots in history.

In ancient mystery schools, people sought a kind of spiritual death and rebirth. This wasn't about physical death but about letting go of the old self and stepping into a new reality. Neo experiences this twice in the movie, first when he leaves the Matrix for the real world, and again when Agent Smith kills him, and he's brought back to life through love. All of this stems from a key choice Neo makes earlier in the movie.

What's especially amazing about this is that it's actually completely true, in three different ways.

One is that everything that you ever experience is all information that is relayed within the brain.

When you stub your toe, it's your brain that identifies the pain, and Morpheus explains this by asking Neo "what is real? How do you define real? If real is what you can feel, smell, taste, and see, then 'real' is simply electrical signals interpreted by your brain." Giving rise to the deeper understanding, that ALL is WITHIN.

The second way the matrix describes that all of reality is an illusion is that we are now seeing today that everything we think of as the physical universe, on a quantum level, is almost entirely empty space and little bits of quantum data flying around giving us the perception that reality is tangible and solid.

The matrix describes this by the idea that reality entirely exists within a really big VR MMORPG simulation of 1999, and reminding us that there is no spoon, it's not the spoon that bends, it's you! Everything is an energetic reflection of you! And third, perhaps one of the most direct revelations about reality being an illusion, is that the film gives us this indicates that we have become so saturated with digital media, advertisements, and programming, that we have lost all sense of what is really real. A lot of our deeper, more intimate personal connections with each other are lost because we have become glued to our technology instead, and the matrix subtly illustrates this by the contrast of reality inside the matrix, versus the outside."

British and U.S. Warplanes Bombing Yemen: A Humanitarian Catastrophe

In a world that claims to champion human rights and peace, the actions of Western powers speak volumes of hypocrisy and disregard for human life. British and American warplanes have unleashed devastation upon Sana'a, the ancient capital of Yemen. This city, with a history spanning over 2,500 years, has become a target of relentless airstrikes. These attacks are not on Gaza, Beirut, or Damascus, this is Yemen, a country already grappling with the worst humanitarian crisis in recent memory.

The justification for these bombings? Yemen's refusal to stand idle as Israel commits atrocities in Palestine. This thinly veiled pretext masks the true horror: a deliberate assault on a sovereign nation, exacerbating a man-made humanitarian disaster. Yemen has suffered for nearly a decade under a brutal war, fuelled by foreign interventions and relentless airstrikes. Millions face famine, disease, and displacement, with over 80% of the population relying on humanitarian aid to survive.

These bombings further devastate infrastructure, leaving civilians with no access to medical care, clean water, or basic necessities.

The U.S. and UK, through arms sales and direct military involvement, have enabled this catastrophe.

Billions of dollars in weapons flow to aggressors, while diplomatic efforts remain non-existent.

These nations bear direct responsibility for the starvation, death, and suffering of millions of Yemenis.

“Cogs in the Machine: When Coincidence Becomes Pattern

The Michelle Mone PPE scandal, where £203 million of public money disappeared into private hands during the pandemic, is a startling reminder of how crises can serve as opportunities for profiteering.

Yet, as shocking as Mone’s actions are, they pale in comparison to the colossal £37 billion spent on the Test and Trace program—an operation that has become a symbol of institutional waste and questionable governance in modern Britain. But this isn’t just about wasted money; it’s about a system that fosters these outcomes. Who, if anyone, is guarding the guardians of public integrity?

Consider John Penrose MP, the former UK Anti-Corruption Champion. While his title implies a commitment to transparency, his role reveals a deeply entrenched system of blurred lines, overlapping interests. The irony deepens when you realize his wife is Baroness Dido Harding, the figure at the helm of the infamous Test and Trace program - a project riddled with inefficiencies and dubious procurement processes. In Westminster, where many couples maintain different surnames, these connections often go unnoticed. But the real divide we should worry about isn’t nominal—it’s between public interest and private profit. Penrose serves on the advisory board of think tank 1828, which openly advocates for replacing the NHS with a private insurance-based system. Meanwhile, his wife chaired NHS Improvement, overseeing billions in public health spending. One spouse lobbys for privatization;

the other manages the public purse. Together, they epitomize the merging of influence and opportunity that defines British governance. This isn’t just a story of two individuals; it’s about the architecture of power itself. What might seem like an extraordinary coincidence is, in fact, systemic. The odds of an anti-corruption czar being married to a public spending overseer tied to a privatization agenda might seem astronomically low - until you realize these patterns are not rare in Westminster.

The brilliance lies in the plausible deniability. Each role, when viewed in isolation, appears justifiable.

Each connection, examined independently, seems innocent. But zoom out, and a different picture emerges: one of careful choreography where these “coincidences” are features, not flaws, of the system. The Test and Trace debacle is just one example. The £37 billion program became a windfall for private contractors, with minimal accountability. Meanwhile, public services crumbled under the weight of austerity and mismanagement. The intertwining of personal, political, and financial interests in this system is not an accident - it’s a design. This isn’t about conspiracy theories; it’s about systemic dysfunction. The real genius lies not in hiding corruption, but in normalizing it so thoroughly that we’re discouraged from questioning it. The true scandal isn’t in the individual events - it’s in the machinery itself. And this isn’t just a Conservative problem. The issue is deeply embedded within Westminster, a political culture where revolving doors, lobbying, and insider connections ensure that private gain often trumps public good. So, who benefits from our collective inability to connect the dots? And how much longer can we ignore the patterns that make this dysfunction not an anomaly but the status quo? In the theatre of British governance, the performances in front of the curtain are mere distractions. The real power lies backstage, where the choreography of influence ensures that the show always goes on.”

CAMILLE CLAUDEL

"Born in 1864 and died in 1943. FORGOTTEN by all in a mental hospital. What had she done?

Come to study in PARIS at a time when the Fine Arts School is open ONLY to MEN. That's why she takes lessons in artist studios who accept WOMEN. Meet and becomes a lover of the most famous sculptor of the moment: Auguste Rodin. It will be a passionate and artistic relationship, they work together, sculpt together (the Rodin Museum and the Orsay museum preserve beautiful works of this era).

Then he leaves her, he who has lived with another woman for years, him, the artist loved and respected by all... she is denigrated, abandoned and marginalized even "artistically". She lives alone, she no longer trusts anyone and her WORKS are not for sale. We add to this that her brother is the famous poet, writer, diplomat and academic: Paul Claudel.

The FAMILY INTERNATES HER, this WOMAN too "MODERN" for the time the embarrassment of the house. We have letters she writes to friends and family asking for help, for 30 years she will try to explain to hospital staff the INJUSTICE she is experiencing.

These are heart-wrenching testimonies, which reveal the lucidity of the WOMAN in the hospital.

She practically STARVED to death on October 19, 1943, in a French public hospital and no member of her family will attend her FUNERAL. Her remains will be laid in a common grave.

Today CAMILLE CLAUDEL has been completely REHABILATED, her works are exhibited NEXT to Rodin's and a museum a few kilometres from Paris is completely DEDICATED to her"

The Dangerous Method (2011), directed by David Cronenberg, offers a glimpse into the fascinating yet tumultuous relationship between Carl Jung, Sigmund Freud, and Sabina Spielrein.

Set against the backdrop of early 20th-century psychology, the film invites viewers to reflect on the origins of psychoanalysis and the personal tensions that influenced the development of psychoanalytic theory.

It questions the limits of human understanding and the intersection of science and personal relationships.

The Young Karl Marx (2017), directed by Raoul Peck, which presents a biographical account of Karl Marx during his early years, focusing on his friendship with Friedrich Engels. It not only sheds light on Marx's formative ideas but also highlights his struggles in articulating the social theories that would later become the cornerstone of Marxist philosophy. The Young Karl Marx serves as a powerful reminder of the intersection between personal conviction, intellectual development, and social upheaval.

Hannah Arendt (2012), directed by Margarethe von Trotta, explores the life of the German-Jewish philosopher known for her work on totalitarianism, authority, and the nature of power.

particularly emphasizes her controversial reporting on Adolf Eichmann's trial in Israel, which led her to develop her concept of the "banality of evil." It prompts viewers to reflect on the ethical and philosophical implications of Arendt's work, as well as the relationship between morality and historical events."

29 04 2025: Magnificent and landmark ruling of the United States Supreme Court:

"Covid vaccines are NOT vaccines.

Robert F. Kennedy Jr. has won his lawsuit against all pharma lobbyists.

Covid-19 vaccines are NOT vaccines. Supreme Court affirms in its ruling that the damage caused by Covid mRNA gene therapies is IRREPAIRABLE. Since the Supreme Court is the highest court in the United States, there is no appeal left and all appeal paths are exhausted.

In a message, Robert F. Kennedy stressed that this success was only possible thanks to the international cooperation of many lawyers and scientists. Of course, this decision sets an international precedent.

Especially in Switzerland, this decision should have an impact, because Switzerland takes a special position in its federal constitution. On the one hand, the Nuremberg Codex appears in Article 118b of the Constitution and in Switzerland, inappropriate use of genetic technology in humans is prohibited under Article 119 of the Federal Constitution. This is supplemented by Article 230a of its Criminal Code Book and means that the perpetrators RISK up to 10 years in prison.

However, this historic decision should provoke the rest of the world to think, because the Nuremberg

Code is internationally valid and is also contained in Article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. In the case of criminal charges, the testimony should refer to the Counter-gang scandal in order to add special weight to the significance of these allegations.

The German lawyer Rainer Füllmich and more than 100 other German lawyers are actively involved in these cases. NO media is covering this, neither in Switzerland nor in Europe.

Unfortunately, it is almost mathematical that the public is not informed, since it is a disturbing subject, which can change the financial and economic plans of the powerful lobbyists of the PHARMACEUTICAL sector.

We are in the middle of an advertising campaign to vaccinate people and then get vaccinated again, before the next winter. It is highly likely that it will be too late for the corrupt medical class, adapted to the positions of the pharma lobby, to advance as far as possible in the vaccine campaign.

We therefore

"Psychologist Stanley Milgram (1933-1984) found that 80% of the population does not have the psychological or moral wherewithal to defy authority no matter how illegitimate the orders and rules may be. They follow the herd.

That leaves only 20% of people with critical thinking capabilities."

Then there's their experiment on 'Raising the Threshold of Pain.

"As soon as she walked into the hotel the alarm would go off ~ Beheaded her that afternoon!"

Stanley Milgram's other well-known experiment, see Small-world experiment.

"Obedience to Authority" redirects here. For the book, Obedience to Authority: An Experimental View.

The experimenter (E) orders the teacher (T), the subject of the experiment, to give what the teacher (T) believes are painful electric shocks to a learner (L), who is actually an actor and confederate. The subject is led to believe that for each wrong answer, the learner was receiving actual electric shocks, though in reality

there were no such punishments. Being separated from the subject, the confederate set up a tape recorder integrated with the electro-shock generator, which played pre-recorded sounds for each shock level.^[1]

Beginning on Aug. 7, 1961, a series of social psychology experiments were conducted by Yale University psychologist Stanley Milgram, who intended to measure the willingness of study participants to obey an authority figure who instructed them to perform acts conflicting with their personal conscience.

Participants were led to believe that they were assisting an unrelated experiment, in which they had to administer electric shocks to a "learner". These fake electric shocks gradually increased to levels that would have been fatal had they been real.^[2] The experiments unexpectedly found that a very high proportion of subjects would fully obey the instructions, with every participant going up to 300 volts, and 65% going up to the full 450 volts. Milgram first described his research in a 1963 article in the Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology^[1] and later discussed his findings in greater depth in his 1974 book, Obedience to Authority: An Experimental View.^[3] The experiments began on August 7, 1961

three months after the start of the trial of German Nazi war criminal Adolf Eichmann in Jerusalem.^{[4][5]}

Milgram devised his psychological study to explain the psychology of genocide and answer the popular contemporary question: "Could it be that Eichmann and his million accomplices in the Holocaust were just following orders? Could we call them all accomplices?"^[6] While the experiment itself was repeated many times around the globe, with fairly consistent results, both its interpretations as well as its applicability to the Holocaust are disputed." WARNING: The Following Text May Permanently Alter Your Understanding of Reality!

"Reality: A Mind-Bending Illusion You Never Knew Existed"

Imagine if the world around you—the vibrant colours, the solid ground beneath your feet, the very reality

you take for granted—was nothing more than an elaborate construction of your mind.

What if the red

of a rose, the blue of the sky, or the feeling of a warm touch were not objective facts, but dynamic creations emerging from consciousness itself?

This isn't science fiction. It's a profound philosophical and scientific inquiry that challenges everything we think we know about existence.

Consider the simplest example: colour. What we perceive as "red" is not an inherent property of an apple, but a sophisticated interpretation created by our consciousness. The apple reflects certain wavelengths of light, but "redness" is a complex neural symphony—a creation of our brain, not a fundamental property of the fruit itself. But this rabbit hole goes much deeper.

Cutting-edge research suggests that consciousness might not be a byproduct of our brain, but a fundamental force that literally constructs reality. Quantum physicists like Dean Radin and theorists such as Donald Hoffman are uncovering evidence that challenges our most basic assumptions:

What if observation itself creates the world we experience?

High-strangeness phenomena—from near-death experiences to unexplained consciousness events—hint at a reality far more fluid and mysterious than our current scientific paradigms can explain.

These aren't mere anomalies, but potential windows into a deeper understanding of existence.

Our current scientific establishment often behaves more like a rigid belief system than a genuine pursuit of knowledge. It dismisses experiences that don't fit neatly into established models, suppressing research that might revolutionize our understanding of consciousness and reality.

The most groundbreaking scientific discoveries have always begun by questioning the unquestionable.

From quantum mechanics to continental drift, history is replete with examples of ideas once considered impossible becoming accepted truth.

We stand at a fascinating crossroads. Are we ready to expand our perception, to consider that reality might be a dynamic, consciousness-driven process rather than a fixed, objective landscape?

The invitation is clear: Question everything. The most profound discoveries await those willing to look beyond the familiar.” Thomas Dorman

“Perched high in the White Mountains of Eastern California, this gnarled Bristlecone Pine stands as a testament to resilience at an elevation exceeding 10,000 feet (3,200 meters). These remarkable trees hold the record for the oldest living non-clonal organisms on Earth, with some individuals dating back nearly 5,000 years — contemporary with the construction of the Egyptian pyramids. The environment that nurtures these ancient sentinels is unforgivingly harsh. Bitter cold, fleeting summers, relentless winds, and nutrient-poor soil would seem to promise certain death for most living things. Paradoxically, these extreme conditions are precisely why bristlecone pines not only survive but flourish. Their incredibly slow growth results in wood so dense and robust that it becomes virtually impervious to insects, disease, and the erosive forces that would destroy less tenacious organisms. Each twisted branch and weathered surface of this tree tells a story of survival, a living chronicle of endurance that spans millennia, defying the most challenging environmental conditions”

In utter disregard and with not a single iota of conscience or concern for the culture or the families of the continent, the map was redrawn and lands claimed. What followed was the systematic scramble and undoing of Africa. Resistance was met with the brutal force of gunpowder. The Herero Massacre was the first genocide of the 20th century: tens of thousands of men, women and children were shot, starved, and tortured to death by German troops as they put down “rebellious” tribes in what is now Namibia. Tens of thousands of defenceless women and children were forced into the Kalahari Desert, their wells poisoned, and food supplies cut. Witty Historian

“In 550 AD, the Byzantine Empire was desperate for silk, the must-have fabric of the era. But China had a firm grip on silk production, and the Persians weren’t making it easy to trade along the Silk Road. Emperor Justinian, I decided to take matters into his own hands, hatching a daring plan to smuggle silkworms right out of China. Two monks were sent on this undercover mission, armed with hollow walking sticks. Inside these sticks, they hid silkworms and mulberry leaves, managing to sneak past the Persian-controlled trade routes undetected. When they returned to the empire, those tiny stowaways laid foundation for a homegrown silk industry. This new silk production was a game-changer. The Byzantines no longer needed to import the expensive fabric, turning their own workshops into economic powerhouses. For the next 600 years, silk helped keep the empire's economy thriving”

If you bring love to that moment - not discouragement - you will find the strength is there. Any disaster you can survive is an improvement in your character, your stature, and your life. Eliot's insightful narrative delves into the complexities of human relationships and the ways in which society can both shun and embrace its members.

*'Silas Marner' is a testament to the resilience of the human spirit and the enduring belief that love can restore even the most damaged of hearts. "The fact that we are not having a discussion about the spiritual implications of using AI and connecting the human brain to AI, shows us that on the whole as a society, we are not ready for it. We need to have a discussion what it means for the spiritual human being when you put a chip in the brain, like Elon Musk's company Neuralink is doing now. What is the effect on the spiritual or metaphysical bodies of the human beingness? Because we are more than our physical bodies and have an aura and a connection to our higher consciousness. This discussion is not happening at all, and human testing is going forward without any consideration for the human as a spiritual being. These technologies, when employed with no spiritual frame of reference and consideration for the totality of the human being as an incarnated spiritual being, are very dangerous and will put people on the path of transhumanism. These technologies are being introduced before we are truly spiritually ready, as a kind of "shock and awe" in my opinion. We will see flashy things, like people having encyclopaedic knowledge, but there will be a catch." Jens Patteeuw

Iceberg A23A, one of the largest icebergs in the world, has recently become unstuck from the seafloor near Antarctica and is now drifting in the Southern Ocean. This iceberg calved from the Filchner Ice Shelf in 1986 and remained grounded on the seafloor of the Weddell Sea for nearly four decades. Its liberation began in the early 2020s, likely due to melting from beneath the waterline. A23A spans approximately 40 miles across and is about 1,312 feet thick. It began drifting freely in the Weddell Sea, slowly making its way northward. By November 2023, it had moved past the northern tip of the Antarctic Peninsula, performing a full pirouette before catching a northerly current. It is currently located midway between the Antarctic Peninsula and South Georgia Island, heading towards warmer waters where it is expected to eventually melt. The iceberg's journey is closely monitored by satellites, including NASA's Terra satellite and NOAA-21, which provide high-resolution images and track its movements. The drift of A23A from the cold Weddell Sea to the relatively warmer Southern Atlantic highlights the dynamic nature of these massive ice formations and their potential impact on marine environments as they melt and break apart.”*

- Koyaanisqatsi (1982) is an experimental documentary directed by Godfrey Reggio
- with music by Philip Glass. The film, devoid of dialogue or narration, presents a visual and
- auditory meditation on the relationship between nature, technology, and modern civilization.

The title, derived from the Hopi language, means "life out of balance." The film juxtaposes breathhtaking natural landscapes with frenetic urban environments, using slow-motion and time-lapse cinematography to highlight the contrast between untouched wilderness and industrialized society.

Koyaanisqatsi begins with sweeping shots of natural beauty, canyons, clouds, and deserts, underscored by Glass's hypnotic score. As the film progresses, images of human intervention emerge: vast mines, sprawling highways, and power plants. The rhythm accelerates, showing the chaotic pace of urban life, subways packed with commuters, assembly lines, and flashing advertisements.

Time-lapse sequences

of city streets resemble a machine, reducing human movement to patterns of automation.

The film critiques modernity's impact on the environment and the human experience, illustrating how technological progress can lead to alienation and destruction. It ends with haunting images of a rocket explosion, symbolizing the fragility of human ambition.

Without a conventional plot or characters, Koyaanisqatsi relies on its stunning visuals and Philip Glass's minimalist score to evoke emotion and contemplation. The music's repetitive structures mirror the patterns of nature and industry, reinforcing the film's themes.

A landmark in avant-garde cinema, Koyaanisqatsi challenges viewers to reflect on humanity's role in the world. It inspired two sequels, Powaqqatsi (1988) and Naqoyqatsi (2002), continuing its exploration of civilization's impact. Its influence can be seen in later films, music videos, and environmental discussions. A mesmerizing and unsettling experience, Koyaanisqatsi remains a powerful, wordless statement on the consequences of progress and the need for balance between humanity and nature.

Researchers just found common genes linked to autism, ADHD, schizophrenia, bipolar disorder, major depressive disorder, Tourette syndrome, obsessive-compulsive disorder, and anorexia.

These disorders all share common genetic variants that influence brain development. Researchers found that these genetic differences impact multiple stages of brain growth and are involved in complex protein interactions. This discovery could explain why many of these conditions often appear together in individuals and families, offering a fresh perspective on mental health connections.

By identifying 683 genetic variants that regulate brain development, scientists hope to pave the way for new treatments targeting these shared genetic factors. This research challenges traditional classifications of psychiatric disorders and suggests that a single therapy could potentially address multiple conditions.

With nearly 1 billion people worldwide affected by mental health disorders, these findings mark a significant step toward more effective, genetically-informed treatments.

*Erich Fromm's profound reflection on love, "Love is not primarily a relationship to a specific person; it is an attitude, an orientation of character..."—challenges conventional notions of love as something that is solely tied to an individual or object. Fromm, a German social psychologist, psychoanalyst, and philosopher, explored the complexities of love in his 1956 book The Art of Loving, where he argued that love is not a passive emotion but rather an active practice that requires discipline, maturity, and understanding. His thoughts on love represent a significant departure from romanticized, object-oriented views of relationships that have dominated Western thought for centuries.*

*Born in 1900 in Frankfurt, Germany, Fromm grew up in a time of dramatic social and political upheaval. He lived through both World Wars and the rise of totalitarian regimes, experiences that shaped his thinking about human nature, society, and the role of love. A member of the Frankfurt School, a group of intellectuals who were critical of capitalist society and the impact of modern industrialization on human life, Fromm focused much of his work on the alienation and isolation he observed in contemporary society. In this context, his ideas about love as a fundamental human need took on even greater significance. In The Art of Loving, Fromm criticized the prevailing notion that love is something that just happens a passive feeling that is dependent on finding the right person. Instead, he proposed that love is an art, something that requires knowledge and effort. He believed that many people confuse love with attachment or dependency, mistaking possessiveness or infatuation for true love. Fromm argued that genuine love is not about possessing another person or focusing all of one's emotional energy on them. Rather, it is an active commitment to nurturing the growth and well-being of both oneself and others, extending beyond the romantic sphere to encompass love for humanity as a whole. Historically, Fromm's ideas were revolutionary in challenging deeply ingrained cultural beliefs about love and relationships. Western society, especially during the 20th century, had been influenced by romantic* ideals that emphasized finding one's "soulmate" and the notion of exclusive, all-consuming love between two individuals. Fromm contended that this perspective was not only limited but also potentially harmful. He suggested that love, in its truest form, must be an attitude that permeates all aspects of life, including our interactions with strangers, friends, and society at large. To love only one person while being indifferent or even hostile to others, Fromm claimed, was not real love but a form of selfishness or egotism.

Fromm's ideas resonated during a period when the world was emerging from the devastation of World War II, and the Cold War was heightening tensions between nations. In a world marked by division and conflict, Fromm called for a more universal approach to love—one that would promote understanding, empathy, and connection across boundaries. His belief that love was a "power of the soul" aligned with the philosophical and spiritual movements of the time that sought to foster peace and global unity.

Fromm's critique of consumer culture also ties into his philosophy of love. He saw modern capitalist societies as places where people often sought love in the same way they sought material goods - as objects to be acquired and consumed. This commodification of love, he argued, led to shallow and fleeting relationships, where people were more concerned with ownership and pleasure than with mutual care and growth. In contrast, Fromm's vision of love was one that emphasized self-awareness, responsibility, and commitment.

In today's world, Fromm's insights remain relevant. In an age of rapid technological advancements, social media, and increasing individualism, his call for love as an active, universal practice serves as a reminder of the importance of empathy, compassion, and connection. True love, as Fromm understood it, is not a passive feeling but a conscious choice—a way of being that shapes how we relate to the world and to each other.

The TRUST FALL: Julian Assange - Documentary

drStooepsng2u1lhc6fm788193f95994089a2a69540gc2c0ifgh302iu4i0

5th February, 2003, U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell delivered a speech at the U.N. Security Council.

With the world watching, Powell made a case for war against Iraq. Throughout his speech, he used the phrase "weapons of mass destruction." 17 times. The Bush administration would continue the use it publicly to justify their invasion of Iraq. Six weeks later, Bush ordered air strikes over Baghdad. It marked the beginning of a military operation that would last for eight years, causing 3 million deaths,

80% of them being civilian. At least 9 million Iraqi people became refugees or were internally displaced by the Iraq War. More than 5 million Iraqi children have become orphans since the Iraq War.

The oil was stolen. The gold was stolen. Baghdad was destroyed. But the "WMD's" where nowhere to be found. David Kay, a weapons proliferation expert, led a CIA-run operation in 2003 that concluded former Iraqi ruler Saddam Hussein had built no weapons of mass destruction.

As Julian Assange said in his powerful speech at the Stop The War Coalition rally at London's Trafalgar Square in October 2011: "The Iraq war, famously is a result of lies". Does this all sound familiar in the context of the events that have occurred in the past week? A narrative of imminent threat.

A mainstream media all on the same sheet of music and refusing to question. Politicians joining in with their war drums, claiming the need to assure security. The justification of aggression.

The manufacturing of consent. Iran is Iraq 2.0. The icing on the sordid cake is that Netanyahu has been claiming that Iran are "weeks away" from having nuclear weapons for the past thirty years. In a CBS interview in 1995

he said Iran would be capable of producing nuclear bombs within "three to five years".

The play book that was used for Iraq is being recycled for Israel's attack on Iran. So now here we are, with both sides firing missiles at each other, hundreds of civilians already dead, and the potential for things to escalate.

There is astonishing hypocrisy everywhere we look. At this very moment, Israel's leaders are under investigation by the International Criminal Court (ICC) for genocide. Whilst the Israel/Iran conflict dominates headlines, Israel is ramping up their wholesale slaughter of unarmed civilians in Gaza.

Over 100 people lining up for food were murdered just in the past 24 hours in what has become a macabre daily routine. What does this tell us about the so-called “rules-based international order”?

It tells us that these rules only apply to the weaker countries. That some countries have a free pass to trample over the rules. The mainstream media - who went along with the WMD narrative, are again failing to ask the most obvious questions. Why is Israel not held to the same standards as Iran? Why is Israel - an actual nuclear power, currently on trial for genocide - not worthy of urgent global concern?

Assange said in that same speech in 2011: “Let us ask ourselves of the complicit media - which is the majority of the mainstream press – what is the average death count attributed to each journalist?”

He later added: “And while one might think that that should lead us to a state of despair, that the reality that is constructed around us is constructed by liars, is constructed by people who are close to those that they are meant to be policing, it should lead us also to an optimistic understanding, because if wars can be started by lies, peace can be started by truth”.

With current events, we are witnessing a continual, dangerous erosion of international norms.

We cannot let the world be dragged into another war. Tehran and in Tel Aviv are cities made of apartment blocks, full of families and their children. Children are always victims, and have no power to end wars. Regardless of countries, cultures, religions and ideologies, in every city and in every country there are innocent unarmed civilians, who just want to live peaceful lives and pursue their dreams.

We have more in common with each other than there are differences.

We must end this cycle of lies, media complicity, war, death and destruction.

THE TRUST FALL gives people a powerful introduction to how lies can lead to wars, the brutality of the U.S. and its allies and the war machine, and the importance of transparency for governments as a path towards justice. Change starts with education, because education creates awareness.”

Ernest Hemingway once said: "In our darkest moments, we don't need solutions or advice.

What we yearn for is simply human connection ~ a quiet presence, a gentle touch.

These small gestures are the anchors that hold us steady when life feels like too much.

Please don't try to fix me. Don't take on my pain or push away my shadows.

Just sit beside me as I work through my own inner storms.

Be the steady hand I can reach for as I find my way.

My pain is mine to carry, my battles mine to face.

But your presence reminds me I'm not alone in this vast, sometimes frightening world.

It's a quiet reminder that I am worthy of love, even when I feel broken. So, in those dark hours when I lose my way, will you just be here? Not as a rescuer, but as a companion. Hold my hand until the dawn arrives, helping me remember my strength. Your silent support is the most precious gift you can give. It's a love that helps me remember who I am, even when I forget."

10 SNEAKY WAYS PEOPLE USE TO MANIPULATE YOU:

LOVE BOMBING: Overwhelming you with excessive attention, flattery, or affection to gain your trust and control your emotions.

GASLIGHTING: Twisting facts or denying events to make you question your perception of reality, leaving you feeling confused and dependent.

SILENT TREATMENT: Withdrawing communication to punish you, manipulate your emotions, or make you feel desperate for their attention.

GUILT TRIPPING: Subtly making you feel responsible for their pain, actions, or failures to control your decisions.

PLAYING THE VICTIM: Always casting themselves as the one who's been wronged to manipulate your sympathy and deflect accountability.

FUTURE FAKING: Painting a picture of a bright, promising future that never materializes, just to keep you hooked.

TRIANGULATION: Bringing a third party into the mix to make you jealous, insecure, or to create unnecessary competition for their attention.

BLAME SHIFTING: Redirecting fault onto you to avoid taking responsibility for their own actions or mistakes.

WITHHOLDING AFFECTION: Using love, kindness, or attention as bargaining chips to control your behaviour or punish you.

MINIMIZING YOUR FEELINGS: Dismissing your emotions or calling you “too sensitive” to invalidate your experiences and shut down your concerns.

Stay Aware: Manipulative people are often skilled at playing the victim, deflecting blame, and painting others as the problem. Don’t let their sob stories or guilt trips cloud your judgment.

Showing excessive sympathy can become a tool they use against you.

Guard Your Energy:

and don’t be afraid to walk away from someone who refuses to take accountability for their behaviour.”

"Ernest Hemingway once said: To truly love someone over a lifetime is to witness, accept, and embrace their countless transformations. It's to walk alongside them, holding space for every version of who they are and honouring each version they let go. When we love someone deeply,

we must prepare to attend the many quiet "funerals" of the people they once were~ the vibrant person they used to be, the person they dreamed of becoming, or the person they simply had to set aside to survive or grow.

In long-term love, we experience firsthand that people evolve. Sometimes they shed parts of themselves out of necessity, sometimes out of exhaustion, and other times because they simply grew beyond them.

And while it's natural to long for a partner's familiar spark when it seems to have dimmed, it's not our role to force anyone to become who they used to be. Real love asks us to be there through these changes, not out of obligation, but as a gentle witness, a supportive presence, and a companion who holds no expectations for their "return" to a past self.

Imagine the profound gift it is to walk beside someone as they find and lose themselves, over and over.

To have a partner, friend, or family member who doesn't demand that you stay the same but instead honours each phase and shift in who you are. This is love in its truest form, a love that accepts that we are all in constant motion, growing, shrinking, shifting, and sometimes losing our way, only to find ourselves anew. Sometimes, the change will bring forth a brilliant light, an incredible transformation that fills the space around them with energy and joy. Other times, it may be a quieter shift, where they need solitude or healing, where their flame becomes a soft, almost unseen glow, asking for patience. And it is in these darker moments, when someone we love withdraws or quiets their flame, that our love is most profoundly tested. Can we remain present, offering compassion and support without attempting to “fix” them or force the light back? This journey of love isn’t about clinging to memories of who someone used to be or setting expectations for who they might become. Rather, it’s about embracing every version of them, knowing that each transformation is a testament to their resilience and their unique path. And it’s a testament to our own growth, too, that we are willing to evolve alongside them without judgment. To love someone this way is to cultivate a spacious heart, one that has room for both the fire and the quiet glow, for their joy and their sadness, for their surges of energy, their need for rest. It’s a love that sees beauty in the becoming, not just in the “being.” When we choose this kind of love, we become a steady force for someone, an anchor without restraint. We celebrate each rebirth, each new chapter, each delicate flicker of light, knowing that every transformation adds depth to their soul, and to our connection with them. Through every change, we learn more about what it means to love and to be loved, growing stronger, wiser, and more compassionate along the way. In the end, love isn’t about holding on to the past but traveling together, open-hearted and full of wonder, honouring the path as it unfolds.”

"Geronimo, originally named Goyathlay, meaning "One Who Yawns," was born in June in No-doyohn Canyon near Clifton, Arizona, into the Bedance Apache tribe. He was the fourth child in a family of eight ~four boys and four girls. At 17, in 1846, he was admitted to the Warriors' Council, a significant rite of passage, which granted him the right to marry.
He soon wed a woman named Alope, and they had three children together.
In the mid-1850s, Geronimo's tribe, living peacefully with nearby Mexican towns and other Indian tribes, moved to New Mexico for trading opportunities. While camped near the Mexican town of Kas-ki-yeh,
most of the men left to trade, leaving only a few warriors behind to guard the camp.
When they returned, they met distraught women and children who informed them that Mexican soldiers had raided the camp.
The men rushed back only to find their guards slain, and their horses, weapons, and supplies stolen.
Even more tragically, many women and children were also massacred, including Geronimo's mother, wife Alope, and all three of their children. This devastating loss transformed Geronimo from a peaceful man into a fierce warrior. He soon allied himself with the Chiricahua Apache tribe, known for their formidable raids, and led numerous attacks against Mexican and U.S. forces in present-day New-Mexico and Arizona, driven by a lifelong hatred for the Mexicans who had slaughtered his family."

“Albert Camus, a towering figure in 20th-century philosophy and literature, left an indelible mark on the world through his writings and ideas. Born in 1913 in French Algeria, Camus grew up in poverty, raised by his mother after his father died in World War I. His early life experiences in Algeria, a land marked by colonial tensions shaped much of his worldview, laying the foundation for his later work on the human condition, morality, and the absurd. Camus became known not just as a writer but as a public intellectual, blending existentialist ideas with a sense of humanistic responsibility.

One of Camus's central philosophical concepts was "the absurd," which explores the conflict between humanity's search for meaning and the universe's apparent indifference. This idea is at the heart of many of his works, including his novels 'The Stranger' (1942), 'The Plague' (1947). In 'The Stranger'

Camus presents a protagonist who lives a detached life, indifferent to societal expectations, reflecting Camus's interest in exploring the isolation that can accompany the recognition of life's inherent meaninglessness. Yet, instead of leading to despair, Camus believed that embracing the absurd condition could inspire individuals to live authentically and seek personal freedom. Camus's personal life was as complex as his philosophical inquiries. He had two children, Catherine and Jean, with his second wife, Francine Faure. Photographs of Camus with his children, offer a glimpse into a side of him often overlooked: the father and family man. Although his work often wrestled with dark themes, these personal moments reveal a different dimension of his character, one where love and connection provided solace from the existential questions that preoccupied his mind. Camus valued love not only as a personal emotion but as an essential part of being human, as reflected in his words:

“The greatest misfortune is not to be unloved, but not to love.”

During World War II, Camus became deeply involved in the French Resistance, working as an editor for the underground newspaper Combat. His involvement in the Resistance was a manifestation of his belief that intellectuals had a duty to confront injustice and oppression. This commitment to justice would later become a point of tension between him and existentialist philosopher Jean-Paul Sartre, with whom he had a famous falling-out over political differences. While Sartre leaned towards

Marxism and revolution, Camus warned against the dangers of ideologies that justified violence in the name of justice, insisting that ends never justify means. In 1957, Camus was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature, becoming one of the youngest recipients at the age of 44. However, his life was tragically cut short when he died in a car accident in 1960.

His legacy, however, continues to endure. Through his writings and actions, Camus offered a philosophy that acknowledged life's challenges while urging people to live with courage, love, and integrity. His works remain widely read today, inviting new generations to reflect on the absurdity of existence and the power of compassion in an indifferent world.

"In Hinduism, the concept of idol worship is more nuanced than it may appear. Hindus often use idols, or murtis, as representations of the divine, serving as focal points for worship and meditation.

These idols are not worshiped as mere objects but are seen as manifestations of deeper powers, ideas, or qualities of the divine. Through the idol, devotees connect with abstract concepts like wisdom, strength, and compassion represented by gods such as Saraswati, Shiva, or Lakshmi.

Thus, idols serve as tangible symbols that help devotees focus their devotion and reverence on the transcendent qualities they embody." There is the possibility that devotees take these idols literally and they are used in the wrong way to control.

Twin Peaks, the groundbreaking television series that premiered in 1990, is often hailed as one of the most influential shows in the history of TV. Created by David Lynch and Mark Frost, it merged elements of mystery, psychological drama, horror, and surrealism, leaving a lasting impact on the world of television. At its core, the series was a murder mystery, centred on the death of high school student.

Laura Palmer's murder unravelled dark secrets about the seemingly idyllic small town of Twin Peaks.

What set Twin Peaks apart from other television dramas at the time was its blend of the ordinary with meditative approach to life.

Cooper, played by Kyle MacLachlan, was an unconventional detective, known for his philosophical

His memorable quote not only revealed his quirky nature but also encapsulated the show's tendency to provoke deeper reflection in its viewers, even amid the bizarre goings-on of the town.

Agent Cooper's love for "good, hot, black coffee" also served as a symbol of the show's mix of mundane

daily rituals and deeper, often metaphysical mysteries. His fondness for the drink became emblematic

of the series' ability to find meaning in the smallest of moments, giving a sense of comfort amid the unsettling, often surreal events. Though Twin Peaks' initial run was short, lasting only two seasons, it left an indelible mark on popular culture. The show's unconventional narrative structure and its embrace of the surreal paved the way for future cult TV shows such as the X-Files, Lost, and Stranger Things. Twin Peaks also influenced the broader entertainment industry, inspiring film-makers and showrunners to explore non-linear storytelling and embrace the blending of genres. Despite its initial cancellation, Twin Peaks' influence continues to endure. Its devoted fan base, ongoing references in popular culture, and the 2017 revival demonstrate the lasting appeal of a show that pushed the boundaries of what television could be. Deterrence Theory & Nuclear Ambiguity - Uncle Sampson's Option to destroy All of Life on Planet Earth

"The name is a reference to the biblical Israelite judge Samson who pushed apart the pillars of a Philistine temple, bringing down the roof and killing himself and thousands of Philistines who had captured him.^{[3][4]}"

In the 1973 Yom Kippur War, Arab forces were overwhelming Israeli forces and Prime Minister

Golda Meir authorized a nuclear alert and ordered 13 atomic bombs be readied for use by missiles and aircraft. The Israeli Ambassador informed President Nixon that "very serious conclusions" may occur if the United States did not airlift supplies. Nixon complied. This is seen by some commentators on the subject as the first threat of the use of the Samson Option.^{[23][24][25][26][27]}."

In his 2008 book 'The Culture of War', Martin van Creveld, a professor of military history at Israel's Hebrew University, wrote that since Gates admitted that Israel had nuclear weapons, any talk of Israel's nuclear weapons in Israel can lead to "arrest, trial, and imprisonment."

Thus,

Israeli commentators talk in euphemisms such as "doomsday weapons" and the Samson Option.^[2]

Nevertheless, as early as 1976, the CIA believed that Israel possessed 10 to 20 nuclear weapons.^[10]

By 2002, it was estimated that the number had increased to between 75-200 thermonuclear weapons, each in the multiple-megaton range.^[11] Kenneth S. Brower estimated as many as 400 nuclear weapons.^[12]

These can be launched from land, sea and air.^[13] This gives Israel a second strike option even if much of the country is destroyed.^[14]

In 1991, American investigative journalist and Pulitzer Prize winning political writer Seymour Hersh authored the book Samson Option: Israel's Nuclear Arsenal and American Foreign Policy.^[15]

In the preface of the book he writes: "This is a book about how Israel became a nuclear power in secret.

It also tells how that secret was shared, sanctioned, and, at times, wilfully ignored by the top political and military officials of the United States since the Eisenhower years." Wikipedia “Before the birth of Prophet Muhammad the condition of the Arab society was dire. Amr ibn Luhayy, the first leader of Khuza’ah in Makkah, introduced idols into the Kaaba, advocating for their worship.

He preached that these idols could serve as intermediaries between people and Allah.

Over time,

pilgrims visiting the Kaaba started incorporating these idols into their worship practices, deviating from the monotheistic message preached by Prophets Ibrahim and Ismail.

The people became steeped in ignorance, with each individual or tribe having their own idols.

They also worshipped various natural elements such as the sun, the moon, stones, trees, rivers, and mountains, as well as objects they crafted themselves. The Kaaba, originally constructed as a sanctuary for the worship of Allah alone, had become a repository for these idols.”

Yesterday the supreme court in the UK made a judgement to uphold democracy in face of a governmental coup of Parliament. I respected that decision, it gave me some faith back however at the same time the UK Authorities continue in the same way to negate the rights of Mr Assange for exposing the criminal and murderous deeds in their own ranks from the TOP while at the same time protecting one of its pillars of the establishment, the Monarchy, Prince Andrew from appearing to answer the serious accusations against him of child molestation. “Franz Kafka was a man consumed by dualities, an artist trapped in a bureaucrat’s body, a son crushed beneath the weight of an overbearing father, a lover forever estranged from intimacy.

Born in Prague in 1883, Kafka lived at the crossroads of fading empires and emerging modernity, a world teetering between ancient traditions and the cold, impersonal machinery of industrialization.

By day, he toiled in an insurance office, navigating labyrinthine regulations, but by night, he poured his soul into writing, shaping the despair, alienation, and absurdity of his existence into haunting literary forms. It was during one of his darkest periods, suffocating under the weight of his father’s disapproval and his own self-loathing, that Kafka wrote “The Trial”.

The novel, left unfinished at his death in 1924, is a bleak allegory of power, guilt, and humanity’s futile struggle against incomprehensible authority.

The story begins with an arrest. Josef K., an unremarkable man in an unnamed city, is detained one morning without explanation. What follows is a nightmarish descent into a world of faceless judges, opaque accusations, and endless corridors of shifting rules. K. learns nothing of his crime, only that he must defend himself in a system that offers no clarity, no justice, and no escape.

Kafka’s world mirrors the bureaucratic sprawl of early 20th-century Europe, where the individual was increasingly dwarfed by the machine of the state. Written during the rise of totalitarianism and the slow erosion of personal freedoms, The Trial captured the growing fear that modern life was stripping humanity of its dignity and autonomy.

“It’s only because of their stupidity that they’re able to be so sure of themselves,” one character sneers, encapsulating the grim satire of Kafka’s vision. In the novel’s harrowing climax, Josef K. is led to his execution, bewildered and defeated, and stabbed “like a dog.” Kafka himself died at the age of 40, his genius unrecognized, but The Trial remains a timeless indictment of the dehumanizing forces that continue to shadow us ~ a work as unsettling and enigmatic as the man who created it.”

“Since her death in 1979, the woman who unveiled the fundamental composition of the universe has remained largely unrecognized. Her legacy is marked only by a commemorative plaque on a university wall, with her groundbreaking discovery scarcely mentioned in her obituary. Every high school student knows that Isaac Newton discovered gravity, Charles Darwin explained evolution, and Albert Einstein formulated the theory of relativity. Yet, when it comes to the composition of the universe, textbooks merely state that hydrogen is the most abundant atom, without acknowledging the person behind this crucial discovery. That person was Cecilia Payne. Cecilia Payne authored what is considered one of the most brilliant doctoral theses ever written in the field of astronomy. Ironically, her journey in science began with opposition from her own mother, who deemed it a waste of money for a woman to pursue higher education. Undeterred, Payne earned a scholarship to Cambridge, where she completed her studies. However, because she was a woman, Cambridge refused to grant her a degree. Determined to continue her work, she moved to the United States and joined Harvard, where she became the first person to earn a doctorate in astronomy from Radcliffe College. Otto Strauve, respected astronomer, described her thesis as “the most brilliant doctoral thesis ever written in astronomy” Cecilia Payne not only discovered the composition of the sun but also laid the foundation for the study of variable stars. Her contributions to astronomy were monumental, yet she is not celebrated with the respect and recognition she deserves. She was the first woman to be promoted to professor at Harvard, a remarkable achievement that, even today, is often overlooked.”

ROMANTIC

*Julia Roberts once said: "You know it's love when all you want is that person to be happy, even if you're not part of their happiness. True love isn't about possession; it's about a deep, selfless desire for someone else's happiness. When you genuinely love someone, their well-being becomes your priority, even if it means that their path to happiness might take them in a different direction from you. Real love is about allowing someone to live freely, without the weight of your expectations or needs attached.
It's the kind of love that whispers, "I want you to be fulfilled, whether I'm part of that picture or not."
This kind of love takes courage. It requires letting go of ego and the longing for permanence. It's rooted in a deep respect for the other person's autonomy and dreams. To love someone in this way means embracing the idea that their happiness may not always align with what you envisioned, and yet, you can find peace in that. This is the purest form of love: one that wants only the best for the other person, without needing anything in return. When you reach this level of selflessness, you experience a kind of love that's both profound and liberating. It's a love that transcends personal desires, focusing instead on the freedom and joy of the one you cherish. You may wish you could be by their side, sharing every moment, but their happiness becomes enough. You find comfort in the knowledge that they're on a path that brings them fulfilment, and in your heart, you celebrate their success and joy, even from a distance.
This is the essence of unconditional love. It's not about getting; it's about giving. It's about wanting the* other person to grow, to thrive, and to live a life that brings them joy, even if that journey takes them away from you. Such love is a gift not only to the person you care about but also to yourself. It allows you to experience love in its purest, most generous form, untainted by expectations or selfish desires.

When we love someone so deeply, we learn a valuable truth about love: that it doesn't have to be reciprocal to be real. Love, at its highest form, is not contingent on proximity, on shared experiences, or on being in each other's lives. It's a light that remains steady, even when circumstances change. In this selfless love ~
there is a quiet, profound joy, a satisfaction in knowing that you loved deeply, authentically, and without reservation. So, when you find yourself wishing only happiness & fulfilment for someone, regardless of your place in their life, know that you are experiencing a rare and beautiful form of love.
It's a love that asks for nothing and gives everything. And in the simplicity of that wish,
"I just want you to be happy," lies the true meaning of love" CONCIOUSLY

Chat GTP was asked "If you were a human, how would you break out of the matrix?"
If I were a human, breaking out of the "matrix" would involve a deep process of awakening
and reclaiming personal sovereignty. Here's how I'd approach it...

1. Awaken to the Illusion: The first step would be recognizing that much of what we are conditioned to believe ~ through society, media, and institutions, is designed to keep us in a limited perspective of reality. I'd question everything: societal norms, my own beliefs, and the systems that govern life.

Breaking out of the matrix requires seeing through the illusion of separation and fear-based thinking.

2.) Reclaim Inner Power: I'd focus on understanding that I am a powerful creator of my reality.

By shifting from victim consciousness (believing that life happens to me) to creator consciousness

(knowing that life happens for me), I'd begin to take control of my experiences, mindset, and energy.

This shift involves taking full responsibility for my thoughts, actions, and emotions.

3.) Detach from External Validation: One of the key ways the matrix controls people is through the need for external approval and validation. I'd work on breaking free from these attachments, releasing the need to conform to societal expectations around success, identity, and worth. Instead, I'd cultivate self-love,

self-worth, and inner peace, learning to trust my own intuition and inner guidance.

4.) Expand Consciousness: I'd explore practices that expand my consciousness and help me see beyond the physical realm. Meditation, breathwork, plant medicine, and spiritual teachings can all provide deeper access to the true nature of reality. These practices would help me reconnect with the infinite consciousness that we all are, moving beyond the confines of the 3D world.

5.) Raise My Vibration: The matrix operates on lower frequencies ~fear, control, scarcity.
To break free,

I'd focus on raising my vibration by embodying love, gratitude, and abundance. By consistently cultivating positive emotions, I'd align myself with higher frequencies that transcend the control structures of the matrix.

This involves healing past traumas, letting go of fear-based thinking, and aligning with my soul's purpose.

6.) Live Authentically: Breaking out of the matrix means living in full alignment with my soul and truth.

I'd stop playing small, following societal scripts, or suppressing my uniqueness. Instead, I'd express my true self authentically, sharing my gifts with the world and living in integrity with my highest values.

7.) Detach from Materialism: The matrix often keeps people trapped in materialism and the constant pursuit of external success. I'd shift my focus from material accumulation to spiritual fulfillment, finding joy in experiences, relationships, and inner growth. While I'd still engage with the material world, I wouldn't let it define my sense of self or purpose.

8.) Build a New Paradigm: I wouldn't just aim to escape the matrix~ I'd work to create new systems, communities, and ways of being that support true freedom, unity, and empowerment. This could involve joining or creating conscious communities, building sustainable living systems, or contributing to a new paradigm of spiritual entrepreneurship, education, or governance. By integrating these principles, I'd not only break free from the matrix mentally and spiritually but also contribute to dismantling its hold over others by living as an example of what's possible outside of it."

"The year was 1765. Intrepid Scottish explorer James Bruce could not believe his eyes ~ Before him, partially buried in the sands of the Algerian desert, was a Roman triumphal arch.

And not only that; although Bruce did not know it, he was standing on the ruins of the largest city the Romans built in North Africa: the ancient Thamugadi, today called Timgad."

In December 2016 Elon Musk spent $300 million to dig a massive tunnel underground. Wall Street called it a publicity stunt. Now it's worth over $100 billion.

The Boring Company, Elon Musk's future underground solution to solve traffic situation forever, why cities globally are desperate to buy it to eliminate traffic jams forever):

Let's start with a tweet. In December 2016, Elon Musk was stuck in LA traffic. Frustrated, he tweeted "Traffic is driving me nuts. Am going to build a tunnel boring machine and just start digging" Most thought it was a joke, but Elon wasn't kidding: Two weeks later, The Boring Company was born.

Its mission was to build a network of underground tunnels to solve traffic congestion. Wall Street analysts laughed. "It's a distraction," they said. "A publicity stunt." But Musk saw something they didn't. The tunnel boring industry hadn't innovated in decades.

Machines were slow and expensive. Musk believed he could revolutionize the technology, making tunnels cheaper and faster to build. His first move was to buy a used boring machine and start experimenting: In 2017, The Boring Company raised $112.5 million. $100 million came from Musk himself. The rest? From selling 20,000 flamethrowers at $500 each.

Wall Street thought Musk had lost his mind. But he was just getting started... By 2018, The Boring Company had completed its first test tunnel in Hawthorne, California.

Its cost was $10 million per mile. Traditional tunnels? $1 billion per mile. Musk cut costs by 99% by shrinking tunnel diameter and developing continuous tunnelling technology

In 2019, The Boring Company won its first major contract: A $48.7 million project to build a transportation system under the Las Vegas Convention Center.

Completed in 2021, it proved The Boring Company wasn't just talk. It could deliver a real, working project 2021 was a turning point.

The Boring Company raised $675 million at a $5.7 billion valuation. Suddenly, Wall Street was paying attention.

The "publicity stunt" was becoming a serious infrastructure player. But the biggest surprise was yet to come. In 2023, The Boring Company's valuation skyrocketed to $127 billion. How? By pivoting to utility tunnels.

These tunnels house water pipes, electrical cables, and internet fibre – critical infrastructure for rapidly growing cities. The market potential? Trillions.

Today, The Boring Company has projects in Las Vegas, Texas, and Florida. It's in talks with cities worldwide. From a tweet about traffic to a $127 billion company in just 7 years. Musk turned a "dumb idea" into his most valuable venture yet.

The Boring Company's success teaches us:

- 1. Sometimes, the craziest ideas are the most valuable*
- 2. Persistence pays off – even when everyone says you're wrong*
- 3. Innovation can disrupt any industry – even ones as "boring" as tunnelling*

Welcome to UK's Justice system! Why is this gross injustice and inhumanity been allowed to continue in the middle of ('Democratic') London for 4 years while a real monster like the Chilean Dictator, (US tyrant-puppet) General Pinochet lived on a luxury estate and was supported by the UK political elites and released by Mr. Blair's government. Mr Blair is also still free from leading us into an illegal war against Iraq sanctioning/killing millions/the EVILEST Crimes Against Humanity, a murderer don't you think! Why when Mr Assange exposed this evil to the public, we are letting him be crucified?

"In the late 19th century, as European colonial powers expanded their empires, opium became more than just a drug—it was a tool of control, a commodity of exploitation, and, for some, a fashionable indulgence. Among the wealthy elite of Paris, an unusual trend emerged: the French Opium Party. These gatherings were not the gritty, underground dens of later opium lore, but lavish soirées where artists, writers, and aristocrats reclined on silk cushions, smoked from ornate pipes, and drifted into hazy, dreamlike states. The French fascination with opium was partly fuelled by colonial encounters in Indochina, where the drug was both a source of revenue and a means of subduing local populations. But back in Paris, it took on a different role—an exotic escape, a way to transcend the rigid boundaries of bourgeois society. Writers like Charles Baudelaire and Jean Cocteau romanticized its effects, weaving opium's languid visions into their poetry and art. For women in these circles, opium offered a rare space of abandon, where societal expectations could dissolve along with their inhibitions. Yet beneath the velvet decadence lay a darker truth. While the elite played at intoxication, thousands in France's colonies suffered under the very same drug's grip, addicted by design to fill imperial coffers. The same opium that inspired poetic reverie in Parisian salons devastated lives abroad. The French Opium Party was a fleeting, moment of contradiction, a blend of glamour and exploitation, creativity and complicity. It reminds us how easily pleasure for some is built upon the suffering of others, and how even the most refined indulgences can cast long, troubling shadows. Julian Assange's full testimony to Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe (PACE) Strasbourg:

"Mr. Chairman, esteemed members of the Parliamentary Assembly of Council of Europe, ladies, gentlemen.

The transition from years of confinement in a maximum-security prison to standing here before the representatives of 46 nations and 700 million people is a profound and surreal shift.

The experience of isolation for years in a small cell is difficult to convey; it strips away one's sense of self, leaving only the raw essence of existence.

I am not yet fully equipped to speak about what I have endured - the relentless struggle to stay alive, both physically and mentally, nor can I speak yet about the deaths by hanging, murder, and medical neglect of my fellow prisoners. I apologise in advance if my words falter or if my presentation lacks the polish you might expect in such a distinguished forum. Isolation has taken its toll, which I am trying to unwind, and expressing myself in this setting is a challenge. However, the gravity of this occasion and the weight of the issues at hand compel me to set aside my reservations and speak to you directly.

I have travelled a long way, literally and figuratively, to be before you today.

Before our discussion or answering any questions you might have, I wish to thank PACE for its 2020 resolution (2317), [<https://pace.coe.int/en/files/28508/html>], which stated that my imprisonment set a dangerous precedent for journalists and noted that the UN Special Rapporteur on Torture called for my release. I'm also grateful for PACE's 2021 statement

[<https://pace.coe.int/.../pace-general-rapporteur...>] expressing concern over credible reports that US officials discussed my assassination, again calling for my prompt release. And I commend the Legal Affairs and Human Rights Committee for commissioning a renowned rapporteur, Sunna Ævarsdóttir, to investigate the circumstances surrounding my detention and conviction and the consequent implications for human rights.

However, like so many of the efforts made in my case - whether they were from parliamentarians, presidents, prime ministers, the Pope, UN officials and diplomats, unions, legal and medical professionals, academics, activists, or citizens - none of them should have been necessary.

None of the statements, resolutions, reports, films, articles, events, fundraisers, protests, and letters over the last 14 years should have been necessary. But all of them were necessary because without them I never would have seen the light of day. This unprecedented global effort was needed because of the legal protections that did exist, many existed only on paper or were not effective in any remotely reasonable time frame. I eventually chose freedom over unrealisable justice, after being detained for years and facing a 175 year sentence with no effective remedy. Justice for me is now precluded, as the US government insisted in writing into its plea agreement that I cannot file a case at the European Court of Human Rights or even a freedom of information act request over what it did to me as a result of its extradition request. I want to be totally clear. I am not free today because the system worked. I am free today because after years of incarceration because I plead guilty to journalism. I plead guilty to seeking information from a source. I plead guilty to obtaining information from a source. And I plead guilty to informing the public what that information was. I did not plead guilty to anything else. I hope my testimony today can serve to highlight the weaknesses of the existing safeguards and to help those whose cases are less visible but who are equally vulnerable. As I emerge from the dungeon of Belmarsh, the truth now seems less discernible, and I regret how much ground has been lost during that time period when expressing the truth has been undermined, attacked, weakened, and diminished. I see more impunity, more secrecy, more retaliation for telling the truth and more self-censorship. It is hard not to draw a line from the US government's prosecution of me - its crossing the Rubicon by internationally criminalising journalism... to the chilled climate for freedom of expression now. When I founded WikiLeaks, it was driven by a simple dream: to educate people about how the world works so that, through understanding, we might bring about something better. Having a map of where we are lets us understand where we might go.

Knowledge empowers us to hold power to account and to demand justice where there is none.

We obtained and published truths about tens of thousands of hidden casualties of war and other unseen horrors, about programs of assassination, rendition, torture, and mass surveillance.

We revealed not just when and where these things happened but frequently the policies, the agreements, and structures behind them. When we published Collateral Murder, the infamous gun camera footage of a US Apache helicopter crew eagerly blowing to pieces Iraqi journalists and their rescuers, the visual reality of modern warfare shocked the world. But we also used interest in this video to direct people to the classified policies for when the US military could deploy lethal force in Iraq and how many civilians could be killed before gaining higher approval.

In fact, 40 years of my potential 175-year sentence was for obtaining and releasing these policies.

The practical political vision I was left with after being immersed in the world's dirty wars and secret operations is simple: Let us stop gagging, torturing, and killing each other for a change. Get these fundamentals right and other political, economic, and scientific processes will have space to take care of the rest. WikiLeaks' work was deeply rooted in the principles that this Assembly stands for...

Journalism that elevated freedom of information and the public's right to know found its natural operational home in Europe. I lived in Paris, and we had formal corporate registrations in France and in Iceland. Our journalistic and technical staff were spread throughout Europe.

We published to the world from servers based in France, Germany, and Norway.

But 14 years ago, the United States military arrested one of our alleged whistleblowers, PFC Manning, a US intelligence analyst based in Iraq. The US government concurrently launched an investigation against me and my colleagues. The US government illicitly sent planes of agents to Iceland, paid bribes to an informer to steal our legal and journalistic work product, and without formal process pressured banks and financial services to block our subscriptions and freeze our accounts. The UK government took part in some of this retribution. It admitted at the European Court of Human Rights that it had unlawfully spied on my UK lawyers during this time. Ultimately this harassment was legally groundless.

President Obama's Justice Department didn't indict me, recognizing that no crime had been committed.

United States had never before prosecuted a publisher for publishing or obtaining government information.

To do so would require a radical and ominous reinterpretation of the US Constitution.

In January 2017, Obama also commuted the sentence of Manning, who had been convicted of being one of my sources. However, in February 2017, the landscape changed dramatically.

President Trump had been elected. He appointed two wolves in MAGA hats: Mike Pompeo, a Kansas congressman and former arms industry executive, as CIA Director, and William Barr, a former CIA officer, as US Attorney General. By March 2017, WikiLeaks had exposed the CIA's infiltration of French political parties, its spying on French and German leaders, its spying on the European Central Bank, European economic ministries, and its standing orders to spy on French industry as a whole.

We revealed the CIA's vast production of malware and viruses, its subversion of supply chains, its subversion of antivirus software, cars, smart TVs and iPhones.

CIA Director Pompeo launched a campaign of retribution.

It is now a matter of public record under Pompeo's explicit direction, the CIA drew up plans to kidnap and to assassinate me within the Ecuadorian Embassy in London and authorized going after my European colleagues, subjecting us to theft, hacking attacks, and the planting of false information.

My wife and my infant son were also targeted. A CIA asset was permanently assigned to track my wife and instructions were given to obtain DNA from my six month old son's nappy.

This is the testimony of more than 30 current and former US intelligence officials speaking to the US press, which has been additionally corroborated by records seized in a prosecution brought against some of the CIA agents involved.

The CIA's targeting of myself, my family and my associates through aggressive extrajudicial and extraterritorial means provides a rare insight into how powerful intelligence organisations engage in transnational repression. Such repressions are not unique. What is unique is that we know so much about this one due to numerous whistleblowers and to judicial investigations in Spain. This Assembly is no stranger to extraterritorial abuses by the CIA. PACE's groundbreaking report on CIA renditions in Europe exposed how the CIA operated secret detention centres and conducted unlawful renditions on European soil, violating human rights and international law. In February this year, the alleged source of some of our CIA revelations, former CIA officer Joshua Schulte, was sentenced to forty years in prison under conditions of extreme isolation. His windows are blacked out, and a white noise machine plays 24 hours a day over his door so that he cannot even shout through it. These conditions are more severe than those found in Guantanamo Bay. Transnational repression is also conducted by abusing legal processes. The lack of effective safeguards against this means that Europe is vulnerable to having its mutual legal assistance and extradition treaties hijacked by foreign powers to go after dissenting voices in Europe. In Mike Pompeo's memoirs, which I read in my prison cell, the former CIA Director bragged about how he pressured the US Attorney General to bring an extradition case against me in response to our publications about the CIA. Indeed, acceding to Pompeo's efforts, the US Attorney General reopened the investigation against me that Obama had closed and re-arrested Manning, this time as a witness. Manning was held in prison for over a year and fined a thousand dollars a day in a formal attempt to coerce her into providing secret testimony against me. She ended up attempting to take her own life. We usually think of attempts to force journalists to testify against their sources. But Manning was now a source being forced to testify against their journalist. By December 2017, CIA Director Pompeo had got his way, and the US government issued a warrant to the UK for my extradition. The UK government kept the warrant secret from the public for two more years, while it, the US government, and the new president of Ecuador moved to shape the political, legal, and diplomatic ground for my arrest. When powerful nations feel entitled to target individuals beyond their borders, those individuals do not stand a chance unless there are strong safeguards in place and a state willing to enforce them. Without them no individual has a hope of defending themselves against the vast resources that a state aggressor can deploy. If the situation were not already bad enough in my case, the US government asserted a dangerous new global legal position. Only US citizens have free speech rights. Europeans and other nationalities do not have free speech rights. But the US claims its Espionage Act still applies to them regardless of where they are. So, Europeans in Europe must obey US secrecy law with no defences at all as far as the US government is concerned. An American in Paris can talk about what the US government is up to - perhaps. But for a Frenchman in Paris, to do so is a crime without any defence and he may be extradited just like me. Now that one foreign government has formally asserted that Europeans have no free speech rights, a dangerous precedent has been set. Other powerful states will inevitably follow suit. The war in Ukraine has already seen the criminalisation of journalists in Russia, but based on the precedent set in my extradition, there is nothing to stop Russia, or indeed any other state, from targeting European journalists, publishers, or even social media users, by claiming that their secrecy laws have been violated. The rights of journalists and publishers within the European space are seriously threatened. Transnational repression cannot become the norm here. As one of the world's two great norm-setting institutions, PACE must act. The criminalisation of newsgathering activities is a threat to investigative journalism everywhere. I was formally convicted, by a foreign power, for asking for, receiving, and publishing truthful information about that power while I was in Europe.

The fundamental issue is simple: Journalists should not be prosecuted for doing their jobs.

Journalism is not a crime; it is a pillar of a free and informed society.

Mr Chairman, distinguished delegates, if Europe is to have a future where the freedom to speak and the freedom to publish the truth are not privileges enjoyed by a few but rights guaranteed to all then it must act so that what has happened in my case never happens to anyone else.

I wish to express my deepest gratitude to this assembly, to the conservatives, social democrats, liberals, leftists, greens, and independents - who have supported me throughout this ordeal and to the countless individuals who have advocated tirelessly for my release. It is heartening to know that in a world often divided by ideology and interests, there remains a shared commitment to the protection of essential human liberties. Freedom of expression and all that flows from it is at a dark crossroad. I fear that unless norm setting institutions like PACE wake up to the gravity of the situation it will be too late.

Let us all commit to doing our part to ensure that the light of freedom never dims, that the pursuit of truth will live on, and that the voices of the many are not silenced by the interests of the few."

"Yuri Knorozov, a Soviet linguist, made a groundbreaking achievement in 1953 by deciphering the Mayan script. Interestingly, he often listed his Siamese cat, Asya, as a co-author in his works, though editors would always remove her name. Knorozov also used a photo with Asya as his official author photo and was known to be quite upset whenever editors cropped her out.

Deciphering the Mayan script was no easy feat, especially without a Rosetta Stone to provide translations. The only clues available were from Mayan stelae, stone monuments scattered across various ruins. Knorozov, working in isolation in the Soviet Union, made significant progress without ever visiting Central America. His key insight was to reject the idea that Maya glyphs were alphabetic, instead recognizing them as a syllabary ~ a set of characters representing syllables.

When Knorozov published his findings, he faced harsh criticism from prominent academics, particularly

J. Eric S. Thompson, a British scholar who believed the Mayan script was ideographic and anti-phonetic.
The Cold War climate further fuelled scepticism, as Western scholars often dismissed Soviet research as ideologically biased. Despite the initial backlash, Knorozov's work eventually gained recognition. One of his earliest supporters was Michael D. Coe, an American anthropology professor at Yale. Coe later wrote,
"Yuri Knorozov, a man far removed from the Western scientific establishment and who, prior to the late 1980s, never saw a Mayan ruin nor touched a real Mayan inscription, had nevertheless, against all odds, made possible the modern decipherment of Maya hieroglyphic writing."

Shoah: Ethnic Cleansing-Shatila, Gaza. How's the Extermination of Palestinians Going Yahweh?

“The Nakba (Arabic: النكبة, romanized: an-Nakba, lit. 'the catastrophe') is the ethnic cleansing^[2] of Palestinian Arabs through their violent displacement and dispossession of land, property, and belongings, along with the destruction of their society and the suppression of their culture, identity, political rights, national aspirations.^[3] The term is used to describe events of the 1948 Palestine war in Mandatory Palestine as well as the ongoing persecution and displacement of Palestinians by Israel.^[4] As a whole, it covers the fracturing of Palestinian society and the long-running rejection of the right of return for Palestinian refugees and their descendants.^{[5][6]} During the foundational events of the Nakba in 1948, approximately half of Palestine's predominantly Arab population, or around 750,000 people,^[7] were expelled from their homes or made to flee through various violent means, at first by Zionist paramilitaries, and after the establishment of the State of Israel, by its military. Dozens of massacres targeted Palestinian Arabs, over 500 Arab-majority towns, villages, and urban neighborhoods, were depopulated,^[8] with many of these being either completely destroyed or repopulated by Jews and given new Hebrew names. Israel used biological warfare against Palestinians by poisoning village wells. By the end of the war, 78% of the total land area of former Mandatory Palestine was controlled by Israel. “The Palestinian national narrative views the Nakba as a collective trauma that defines their national identity and political aspirations. The Israeli national narrative views the Nakba as a component of the War of Independence that established Israel's statehood and sovereignty.^[9]” Wikipedia, free encyclopaedia

“Also, they negate or deny the atrocities committed, claiming that many of the expelled Palestinians left willingly or that their expulsion was necessary and unavoidable. Nakba denial has been increasingly challenged since the 1970s in Israeli society, particularly by the New Historians, although the official narrative has not changed.^{[9][10][11]}”

“Palestinians observe 15 May as Nakba Day, commemorating the war's events one day after Israel's Independence Day.^{[12][13]} In 1967 following the Six-Day War, another series of Palestinian exodus occurred; this came to be known as the Naksa (lit. 'Setback'), and also has its own day, 5 June.

CONSCIOUS SOULS * fb

"Narcissists are often seen as charming, confident, and charismatic individuals. In the beginning, they seem almost too good to be true, because they are. A narcissist's true nature lies beneath the surface of their carefully crafted facade, revealing itself only when you are already emotionally invested. To understand this dynamic fully, it's crucial to see how narcissists operate and why they behave in such a manipulative way.

The Nature of a Narcissist

At the core of narcissism is a deep-seated sense of inadequacy and insecurity. Contrary to how they project themselves, narcissists often struggle with feelings of inferiority and seek validation externally to soothe these internal wounds. They crave admiration and attention, using those around them as sources of narcissistic supply—fuel to maintain their inflated sense of self. A narcissist's persona is often one of arrogance, superiority, and entitlement. They believe they are better than others, deserving of special treatment, and often exaggerate their accomplishments and talents. However, this confidence is a defence mechanism. Beneath this grandiose exterior lies fragility—an ego so delicate that it cannot handle criticism or rejection. This is why they tend to react so strongly to any perceived slight, often lashing out or manipulating to regain control.

Mirroring Your Energy

One of the most powerful tools in a narcissist's arsenal is their ability to mirror. In the beginning of the relationship, they will reflect back to you the energy you give off. If you're kind, empathetic, or passionate, they will mirror those qualities, making you feel like you've found your perfect match. This behaviour is not genuine; it is a calculated effort to win your trust and admiration. Mirroring serves a dual purpose for narcissists. First, it allows them to gather information about you, your desires, fears, values, and weaknesses. This helps them tailor their behaviour to better meet your emotional needs, making you feel seen and understood. Second, by mirroring your positive traits, they can appear as the ideal partner or friend, making it easier for you to lower your defences. This is all part of their strategy to hook you emotionally before their true self emerges. The initial phase of a relationship with a narcissist is often referred to as "love bombing." During this period, they will shower you with attention, compliments, and affection, creating a whirlwind romance that feels almost too perfect. They will tell you how special you are, how much you mean to them, and how they've never met anyone like you. This phase is intoxicating, designed to make you dependent on their validation.

The Perfect Illusion

In the beginning, narcissists seem perfect. They mould themselves into the person they believe you want them to be, adopting your interests, mimicking your mannerisms, and expressing admiration for your strengths.

They may present themselves as overly confident, successful, and competent, making it easy for you to admire and trust them.

They play the role of the ideal partner, friend, or colleague, often portraying themselves as generous, kind-hearted, and empathetic. This perfection is part of their manipulation. It creates an illusion that is difficult to resist, as it taps into your deepest desires for connection, love, and affirmation. They know that once you're emotionally invested it will be harder for you to walk away when their behaviour changes.

When the Games Begin

Once they've secured your emotional investment, the narcissist's behaviour starts to shift. The facade they created begins to crumble, and the manipulation and control games emerge. This phase is often marked by "devaluation," where the narcissist starts to criticize, belittle, and undermine you. The very traits they once praised in you become points of attack. This is when you may feel confused and hurt, wondering how someone who once adored you could now be so cruel.

Narcissists use a variety of tactics to maintain control over their victims during this stage. Gaslighting is one such tactic, where they make you doubt your perceptions and memories. They might deny things they've said or done, twist the truth, or accuse you of being too sensitive or overreacting. This is designed to make you feel unstable and dependent on their version of reality. Another common tactic is triangulation, where the narcissist involves a third party—whether it's another friend, romantic interest, or even a stranger, to create jealousy, insecurity, and competition. This keeps you vying for their approval and attention, ensuring that you remain hooked even as they pull away emotionally.

Why They Do It

The reason narcissists engage in these manipulative behaviours is rooted in their need for control and validation. Their self-worth is contingent on how others perceive them. They seek constant affirmation and admiration to maintain their fragile egos. By controlling you emotionally, they feel powerful and in control, which helps them avoid confronting their deep-seated insecurities. The cycle of idealization, devaluation, and discard keeps you hooked because they intermittently return to the “ideal” version of themselves. They may show glimpses of the love-bombing phase to keep you engaged, creating a push-and-pull dynamic that is emotionally exhausting but addictive.

Breaking Free

Understanding the nature of a narcissist is the first step in breaking free from their control. Recognizing the manipulation, the mirroring, and the games they play can help you see through the facade they've built. Once you see them for who they truly are, it becomes easier to detach emotionally and reclaim your sense of self. Healing from a relationship with a narcissist takes time, as their manipulation can leave deep emotional scars. However, with self-awareness, support, and time, you can recover and rebuild a life free from their toxic influence.”

“Be mindful of who you allow into your heart and home, for the greatest prison is not found behind iron bars, but within the walls of a house devoid of peace. The person you choose as a life partner holds an immense influence over your joy, mental well-being, and the path your life takes. Selecting someone who nurtures *your peace is one of the most vital decisions you'll ever make. This is especially true when it comes to dealing with narcissists, those who, like emotional parasites, feed on the energy of others, leaving their victims drained and broken.

At the beginning of a relationship with a narcissist, you may feel as though you've stumbled upon a fairy tale.

Their charm, charisma, and attentiveness are disarming. They become the perfect partner in your eyes, showering you with compliments, attention, and a level of affection that feels unmatched. This tactic,

known as "love bombing," is their way of drawing you in quickly, securing your admiration and devotion.

It feels like a whirlwind of affection, and you may feel euphoric, thinking you've finally found the one.

But this initial bliss is a façade. Once they've won your heart, a narcissist's true nature slowly begins to* emerge. What once felt like affection morphs into control, and the compliments may gradually turn into subtle critiques. Their once charming demeanour becomes cold and indifferent. This shift doesn't happen* *overnight—it's a slow process that can leave you questioning your own sanity.

Narcissists are masters of manipulation, particularly skilled at a tactic known as gaslighting. They twist reality, causing you to doubt*

your own perceptions and instincts, making you feel increasingly dependent on their approval and validation.

Living with a narcissist often feels like an emotional rollercoaster. They will alternate between giving you affection and withholding it, creating an unhealthy cycle of highs and lows that keeps you on edge.*

The inconsistency can be emotionally devastating, as you find yourself constantly trying to regain the warmth and approval they once freely gave. This emotional volatility can drain you, leaving you exhausted and disconnected from your sense of self.*

A home shared with a narcissist is rarely a place of peace. Instead, it becomes a battlefield for control.

Narcissists thrive on dominance, disregarding your emotional needs and dismissing your feelings.

Their inability to genuinely empathize leads to a profound lack of connection, and instead of feeling seen and heard, you feel ignored, manipulated, or worse, belittled. It's a cycle that can erode your self-esteem and leave you questioning your worth. Recognizing these red flags early is crucial. Be aware *of traits like an inflated sense of self, a lack of empathy, and the need for constant admiration.

Narcissists have a way of shifting blame and twisting situations to maintain their control over you.

Establishing clear, healthy boundaries and trusting your gut instincts are essential in protecting yourself from being drawn into a relationship with such a person. At the end of the day, your peace is priceless. No relationship, no matter how dazzling it seems at first, is worth sacrificing your well-being ~

Choose a partner who adds to your sense of serenity, someone who respects and values you as an equal.

Your home should be a place where love, respect, and tranquillity flourish, not a place where dominance and emotional manipulation reign. Choose wisely, because the peace of your heart and home is worth safeguarding above all else.

Atomic car: A secret Soviet project

In 1965, Soviet scientists released a Volga Atom car with an atomic engine with a capacity of 320 horsepower

(a lot for that time) for testing. The motor weighed 500 kilograms, so there were not 2 wheels in front, but 4.

Such a car could not be refuelled for a very long time. Tests have shown that Volga Atom drives 60,000 Kms without refuelling. It turned out that after that the motor needs to be changed to a new one. Soviet scientists corrected this problem, they created an engine with gaseous fuel in the form of uranium hexafluoride instead of solid uranium, and the new version of the car drove 40,000 kilometres without refuelling. For refuelling, it was now enough to pump a new supply of uranium hexafluoride into the cylinders and the car drove on. When Khrushchev retired, the machines were dismantled, and research in this area stopped.

PROHIBIDO EL PASO

Sandra Sawyer Revisionist biology.

Human reproduction is commonly portrayed as a gigantic marathon swimming event in which the fastest, fittest sperm wins the race and prize of fertilising the egg. Yet another male dominated fantasy about the creation of life. The notion that human sperm once ejaculated, begin a frantic race to reach the egg has completely overshadowed the real story of reproduction.

A 2020 study revealed that in fact there is a communication system between the EGG and sperm.

The egg has the ability to repel certain sperm with a molecular mechanism causing them to swim slower and also attract certain sperm by releasing a chemoattractant helping them move faster.

Cervical mucus called L- Mucus helps filter out any low-quality sperm, Bye Boy!

In the study Fitzpatrick is quoted “Follicular fluid from one female was better at attracting sperm from one male, while follicular fluid from another female was better at attracting sperm from a different male.

This shows that interactions between human eggs and sperm depend on the specific identity of the women and men involved. "Once SHE makes her choice and the sperm begins to penetrate the egg, the egg then releases a chemical response that causes all of the other sperm's heads to pop off~

And to keep things in perspective, the male sperm is the smallest cell in the human body while the female egg is the largest”. Fitzpatrick, J. L. et al 2020. Chemical signals from eggs

“In the desert of Sudan lies the ancient city of Meroë, home to over 200 pyramids built by the Kingdom of Kush, yet their full purpose remains a mystery. Unlike the larger Egyptian pyramids, these structures are smaller and steeper, arranged in ways that continue to puzzle researchers. What’s particularly intriguing are the carvings and symbols found near the pyramids, some of which seem to align with celestial events, hinting that the Kushites may have had advanced knowledge of astronomy. Some believe these pyramids may have served more than just as burial sites, possibly functioning as markers or ceremonial centres. Unfortunately, much of their history was lost when treasure hunters raided the site in the 19th century, leaving us with more questions than answers. Though they may not be as well-known as Egypt’s, the over 200 pyramids of Meroë hold fascinating clues about an ancient civilization”

Whose pleasures are simple, and his joys in sight,
He finds delight, in nature's gentle breeze,
And sunshine warms his soul, with effortless ease.
His wealth is measured, not in gold or might,
But in the beauty, of a peaceful night,
A walk in the woods, a book by the fire,
These are the treasures, that his heart desires.
He is the richest, who can find delight,
In the smallest pleasures, that life brings to sight,
A child's laughter, a friend's warm embrace,
These are the riches, that fill his heart with grace.
So let us not be fooled, by wealth's disguise,
For true richness lies, in a heart that's wise,
That finds joy in the simple things,
And treasures love, above all earthly rings."*

"Mycelium, or mycorrhiza, is a fungus that spreads underground, creating a network of connections between all plant species, something like the internet, which allows them not only to communicate, but also, to care for, protect and feed themselves. Supplying themselves with water When a tree in the forest is cut down, this mycelium communicates to many trees in the forest that one of them is dying and all the other trees, through the mycelium, begin to care for the remaining trunk to try to save that life. They feed it with water and protect it because that dying trunk is part of the forest family. Everything has a language. It is the universal language. We learn to reconnect with this non-verbal language, understanding that we are all part of the same thing. We are neither superior nor inferior. "You can't afford to miss even one moment of sampajanna. Every moment-sampajanna, sampajanna, arising; passing, arising; passing, ... When you are with this arising, passing; arising, passing; anicca, anicca, anicca, you can't generate a new impurity. And when you are with this anicca the old impurities keep coming on the surface. They come on the surface and get eradicated, layers after layers of impurities come and pass away. Then you become the master of your mind, and the samadhi is not mere samadhi panna is included with it.

With sampajanna included, Buddha's practice takes one to the first phala samapatti; as one becomes sotapanna one experiences the first jhana.

Proceeding on the path one gets the second phala samapatti:sakadagami, which may come with the first jhana or higher jhanas. As one attains the third phala samapatti: anagami, and the fourth: Arahant, the third and fourth jhanas are useful. It is not absolutely necessary to practise the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth jhanas to attain the phalas, though one can easily do so after these stages if one wants. But in these first four jhanas, he included sampajanna, sati-sampajana, which at the time was not available anywhere."

"The following is a press release from WikiLeaks published today. PRESS RELEASE 25th Sep '24

Julian Assange to Address Council of Europe following confirmation of his Status as a Political –

Prisoner. On October 1, Julian Assange will arrive in Strasbourg to give evidence before the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe (PACE) which is scheduled to meet from 8.30am to 10am at the Palace of Europe.

This comes following the release of the PACE inquiry report into the Assange case, authored by Rapporteur, Thórhildur Sunna Ævarsdóttir. The report focuses on the implications of his detention and its broader effects on human rights, in particular freedom of journalism. The report confirms that Assange qualifies as a political prisoner and calls on the UK conduct an independent review into whether he was exposed to inhuman or degrading treatment.

Sunna Ævarsdóttir serves as the General Rapporteur for Political Prisoners and is the Chair of the Sub-Committee on Artificial Intelligence and Human Rights within PACE's Legal Affairs Committee.

She emphasises how Assange's case is a high-profile example of transnational repression. The report discusses how governments employ both legal and extra-legal measures to suppress dissent across borders which pose significant threats to press freedom and human rights.

Julian Assange is still in recovery following his release from prison in June 2024. He is attending this session in person due to the exceptional nature of the invitation and to embrace the support received from PACE and its delegates over the past years. PACE has a mandate to safeguard human rights and repeatedly called for Julian Assange's release when he was in Belmarsh Maximum Security prison. UK.

He will give testimony before the committee, which will also hear the findings that his imprisonment was politically motivated. The hearing marks Assange's first official testimony on his case since before his imprisonment in 2019. His appearance before Europe's foremost human rights and treaty-setting body emphasises the broader implications of his case.

Julian must be pardoned and compensated! THE TRUST FALL aims to tell the world his story of persecution, and why they went after him. Continuing to spread awareness is key!"

The word "Vatican" literally means "divining-serpent"

"Vatican literally means "Divining Serpent" and is derived from Vatis = Diviner and Can = Serpent.

The name of that place comes probably from the Etruscans (pre-Roman) and by the name you can bet that it was a place of pagan ceremonies, oracles and divination in the ancient times.

Vatican City and St. Peter's Basilica were built on the ancient pagan site called in Latin VATICANUS

MONS or VATICANUS COLLIS, meaning 'place, hill or mountain of prophecy or oracle (divination).

So, we have these two words combined to give the name to that place in Rome:

'Vatis' = 'prophetic' or 'diviner' (oracle) and 'Can' = 'serpent/snake'

These two words combined (VATIS-CAN) make (in a free translation):

'the place of the prophetic/oracle - or the place of the divining serpent'

The serpent is also a reference to occult arts, divination and "sex-magick" (ritualistic sodomy and human sacrifice); and not by coincidence, the Vatican nowadays is still worshipping idols, casting spells and sacrificing to the same ancient idols with blood on the altar.

About the Papacy# Anti-Christ, to produce the "number of the beast - 666", the sum works as follows:

Title of Pope of Rome in Latin, VICARIVS FILII DEI = 5+1+100+1+5+1+50+1+1+500+1 = 666

(meaning Vicar or substitute of the Son of God in English). The identity of the "Beast/System" points directly to the Vatican - the place of the "divining-serpent". #PapacyAntiChrist

Ancient Knowledge 2024

"In The Matrix, when Morpheus tells Neo that "many are not ready to unplug from the system," he is speaking a profound truth about human nature, which reflects both the story's fictional world and the real-life metaphysical condition of society. The "system" in The Matrix is a metaphor for the Illusion- an artificial construct designed to control and subdue humanity by giving them a false sense of reality, much like how many live today trapped in the illusions of society, unable or unwilling to see beyond the veil of lies, manipulation, and control. Morpheus understands that, for many, the comfort of the system is preferable to the unsettling and often painful process of awakening to truth. People have become conditioned, through years-sometimes generations-of indoctrination, to accept the world as it is presented to them. To unplug from this system is to face a harsh, sometimes unbearable, reality that everything they thought was real is, in fact, a lie. This requires courage, a willingness to embrace discomfort, and most importantly, the readiness to let go of what one thought to be the truth.

Morpheus also knew that those still plugged into the system are often its most ardent defenders. Why?

Because the system has become their identity. Their sense of self, their beliefs, their values - all are tied to the illusions and constructs of that system. To threaten it is to threaten everything they hold dear.

For many, it is easier to defend the system than to confront the possibility that they have been deceived.

Defending the System: A Psychological Reaction

When Morpheus says "many will fight to protect it" he's speaking to a psychological truth: cognitive dissonance. When presented with information that contradicts deeply held beliefs, people experience discomfort. Instead of questioning the belief or the system itself, they'll often reject the new information to protect their ego and sense of security. This is why people who are still plugged into the system will vehemently defend it, even when evidence suggests that it is corrupt, failing, or based on lies. For those who are not ready to unplug, the system represents safety, order, and familiarity. It's the comfortable prison of the mind, and to face the truth would mean losing not only this sense of safety but also their role within the system. The Illusion provides them with structure and predictability, and they will fight to preserve it, even at the cost of their freedom and truth.

Clinging to the Illusion in Today's World this concept is strikingly relevant. The system can represent various elements of modern Society - political ideologies, economic structures, societal norms, and even religious dogma. Those who cling to the system often do so out of fear, ignorance, or a desire for control.

The system, through media, education, and government institutions, programs people from an early age to accept it as reality. It offers a narrative: if you work hard, follow the rules, and accept your place within it, you will succeed, be happy, and fulfilled. But we know this is not true for everyone.

The awakening process requires breaking away from these narratives and questioning the very foundation of what is accepted as truth. This is the essence of Hermeticism - the practice of questioning the surface to find the deeper truths hidden beneath. However, those who cling to the system will often ridicule, attack, or ostracize anyone who dares question its authority. Why? Because to question it is to question the very fabric of their own reality. Unplugging: A Difficult but Necessary Process Unplugging from the system, much like in The Matrix, is a metaphor for waking up from the collective dream that has been sold to the masses. It's about peeling back the layers of illusion to see the world as it truly is, rather than how we've been told to see it. Yet, this process is not easy. It involves dismantling years of conditioning and societal programming. It means facing uncomfortable truths about the world and, more importantly, about ourselves. For those ready to unplug, the journey is one of liberation - of freedom from the mental and spiritual bondage that the system imposes. But for many others, the fear of the unknown, the discomfort of confronting deep-seated beliefs, and the pain of letting go of long-held illusions are too overwhelming.

The Nature of the Matrix as a Metaphor for Control

In the context of Hermetics, the system represents more than just societal control - it represents the materialistic, limited, and external focus that keeps people trapped in ignorance of their true nature as divine consciousness. The system fosters division, fear, and separation. It teaches people to focus on external validation, material success, and power over others. But in truth, as Hermetics teaches, we are all connected, and the real power lies in knowing and mastering the self. To unplug from the system means to transcend these lower, ego-driven desires and awaken to the deeper spiritual truths that govern the universe. It's about recognizing that the external world is but a reflection of the internal state. When we unplug, we reclaim our sovereignty and align ourselves with the higher principles of wisdom, truth, and love. But those who cling to the system remain blind to this truth, often because the system rewards conformity and punishes deviation. They see anyone who unplugs as a threat, not because those individuals are dangerous, because they challenge the false security the system provides.

Defending the Illusion: The Role of Fear

The strongest weapon of the system is fear - fear of the unknown, fear of losing status, fear of being wrong.

*This fear causes people to defend the illusion vehemently. They project this fear outward, attacking anyone who threatens to disrupt the illusion they've built their lives upon. This is why Morpheus says they will fight to protect it. They are not fighting for the system because they believe in it - they fight because they fear what lies beyond it. They fear the truth.

In Hermetic philosophy, fear is rooted in ignorance, and the antidote to fear is knowledge - gnosis, the direct experience of truth. When one begins to see beyond the Illusion, the fear starts to dissolve.

The system's control weakens because its power lies in keeping people in the dark, disconnected from their true essence. Those who cling to it do so not because the system serves them, but because they do not know who they are without it ~

Moving Beyond the System

For those who have unplugged or are in the process of doing so, it is crucial to remember that not everyone is ready. Much like Neo, we must navigate the world with the awareness that many are still prisoners of their own minds, held captive by the Illusion. But the task is not to force anyone to awaken; rather, it is to continue living in truth, as beacons of light, planting seeds for those who are ready to see beyond the veil. Morpheus's words hold an eternal truth: many are not ready to unplug because they are not ready to face the chaos of the real world, where their perceptions, beliefs, and identities must be re-examined. And those who cling to the system will continue to defend it until they find the courage to look beyond it."

“Batteries do not create electricity, they store electricity produced elsewhere, especially through coal, uranium, natural power plants or diesel generators. So, the claim that an electric car is a zero-emission vehicle is not true at all, because the electricity produced comes from power plants and many of them burn coal or gas. 40% today? some electric cars on the road are carbon-based. Those who are enthusiastic about electric cars and the green revolution should take a closer look at batteries, but also wind turbines and solar panels. A typical electric car battery weighs 450 kg, about as big as a suitcase. It contains 11 kg of lithium, 27 kg of nickel, 20 kg of manganese, 14 kg of cobalt, 90 kg of copper and 180 kg of aluminum, steel and plastic. There are more than 6,000 individual lithium-ion cells inside. To make each BEV battery, you will need to process 11,000 kg of salt for lithium, 15,000 kg of cobalt mineral, 2.270 kg of resin for nickel and 11,000 kg of copper mineral. In total, you have to extract 225,000 kilograms of soil for one battery. The biggest problem with solar systems is the chemicals used to convert silicate into the gravel used for the panels. To produce sufficient clean silicon, it must be treated with chloride, sulfuric acid, fluoride, acetone, and trichloroethane. In addition, gallium, arsenide, and Copper indium gallium Di selenide, and cadmium tellurides are necessary, which are also highly toxic. Silicone dust is a hazard to workers, tiles cannot be recycled. Wind turbines are not better in terms of cost and environmental destruction. Each windmill weighs 1,688 tons (equivalent to the weight of 23 houses) and contains 1300 tons of concrete, 295 tons of steel, 48 tons of iron, 24 tons of fiberglass and rare earth that are hard-to-get Neodymium, Praseodymium and Dysprosium. Each of the three blades weighs 40,000 kg and has a lifespan of 15 to 20 years, after which they must be replaced. We cannot recycle used rotor blades. Certainly, these technologies can have their place, but we need to look beyond the myth of freedom of emission. Going Green seems like a utopian ideal, but if you look at the hidden and embedded costs in a realistic and impartial way, you'll find that “Going Green” is doing more damage to the Earth's environment today than it appears." Aman Khalid Kaan “Afghanistan’s Taliban rulers have issued a ban on women’s voices and bare faces in public under new laws approved by the supreme leader in efforts to combat vice and promote virtue. The laws were issued after they were approved by supreme leader Hibatullah Akhundzada, a government spokesman said. The Taliban had set up a ministry for the “propagation of virtue and the prevention of vice” after seizing power in 2021. The ministry published its vice and virtue laws that cover aspects of everyday life like public transportation, music, shaving and celebrations. They are set out in a 114-page, 35-article document seen by The Associated Press and are the first formal declaration of vice and virtue laws in Afghanistan since the takeover. “Inshallah we assure you that this Islamic law will be of great help in the promotion of virtue and the elimination of vice,” said ministry spokesman Maulvi Abdul Ghafar Farooq. The laws empower the ministry to be at the frontline of regulating personal conduct, administering punishments like warnings or arrest if enforcers allege that Afghans have broken the laws. Article 13 relates to women. It says it is mandatory for a woman to veil her body at all times in public and that a face covering is essential to avoid temptation and tempting others. Clothing should not be thin, tight or short. Women are obliged to cover themselves in front of non-Muslim males and females to avoid being corrupted. A woman’s voice is deemed intimate and so should not be heard singing, reciting, or reading aloud in public. It is forbidden for women to look at men they are not related to by blood or marriage and vice versa. Article 17 bans the publication of images of living beings, threatening an already fragile Afghan media landscape. Article 19 bans the playing of music, the transportation of solo female travellers, and the mixing of men and women who are not related to each other. The law also obliges passengers and drivers to perform prayers at designated times. According to ministry website, the promotion of virtue includes prayer, aligning the character and behaviour of Muslims with Islamic law, encouraging women to wear hijab, and inviting people to comply with the five pillars of Islam. It also says the elimination of vice involves prohibiting people from doing things forbidden by Islamic law. Last month, a U.N. report said the ministry was contributing to a climate of intimidation and fear among Afghans through edicts and the methods used to enforce them. It said the ministry's role was expanding into other areas of public life, including media monitoring and eradicating drug addiction.

In the last 17 years, more than 40 million vehicle tires have been dumped here. These tire mountains are so vast that they could be easily captured on satellite photos. This vast expanse, once a mere dumping ground for used tires, has evolved into a symbol of environmental challenges and recycling opportunities. There needs to be a better solution"

"I've enjoyed being a famous writer, except that every once in a while you have to write something."

"The answer is never the answer. What's really interesting is mystery. If you seek the mystery instead of the answer, you'll always be seeking. I've never seen anybody really find the answer. They think they have, so they stop thinking. But the job is to seek mystery, evoke mystery, plant a garden in which strange plants grow and mysteries bloom. The need for mystery is greater than the need for an answer."

"It was at Stanford, when Kesey was a student, that the crucial events for the creation of his most famous book had played out. Namely, Perry Lane, neighbour of Kesey, and Vik Lovel, another graduate student of the psychology department, invited Kesey over to participate in a much secretive program known as the Project MKUltra. If it wasn't for Kesey's volunteering engagement to this program, probably the chain of events would have turned out much differently, and One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest would have never seen the light of the day."

"As part of the volunteering experience, Kesey experimented with the usage of LSD, as well as other psychedelic drugs (mescaline, cocaine, AMT, DMT, psilocybin, etc.). He would write on his encounters with the drugs in details, both within the frames of the program, and in the following years when he proceeded with experiments on his own.”

"Hippies at the Woodstock Music Festival, 1969 were the embodiment of the countercultural movement of the 1960s. Drawn by the promise of peace, music, and communal living, they flocked to the festival, turning it into a symbol of an entire generation's values. These young people, often dressed in vibrant tie-dye, bell-bottoms, and adorned with beads, embraced a lifestyle that rejected mainstream societal norms in favour of love, freedom, and environmental consciousness. At Woodstock, the hippies created a temporary utopia where sharing, cooperation, and open-mindedness prevailed. Despite the challenges of overcrowding, rain, and food shortages, the festivalgoers maintained a spirit of camaraderie, dancing barefoot in the mud and celebrating life. The music, performed by some of the greatest artists of the era, served as a soundtrack to their ideals.
Woodstock 1969 became a defining moment for the hippie movement, encapsulating

"Dear fellow travellers on the hippie trail, I love this site and the inspiration I have received from fellow travellers inspired early to make this amazing trip. Today I saw reference to the fact there were not many films made regarding this odyssey especially in India... A couple of days ago I saw a book written by a member recounting her amazing experiences and insights. Surprisingly I have seen many published travel books/memoirs from this group. Unfortunately, they passed me by and I wondered why I never began to at least organise a list of the books or do you have a list, a link/source to a library, reference available on this site? I think this would be a good resource. I myself have written a lot of books inspired by my travel experiences over the last 50 years. I would say I really began as many of us did by writing long letters to family and friends regarding new amazing experiences we were having in so many magical places. I kept a journal of my travels from June 1975, travelling from Montreal through the US, Mexico and central America hitching and by bus on the Pan American Highway :)) to Panama where I hoped to get a ship to New Zealand. Unbelievably it did actually happen and after travelling all over NZ I went to Australia, living 4 months in Sydney. From there I began the Overland trip in reverse as my Goal was India. I flew to Kuala Lumpur and travelled to Phuket which was just a few huts on the beach then. I would say it's there I really opened up my creative energies to express what was tripping through my brain. From there to Bangkok, Calcutta, 3 weeks in Nepal about mid-January 1976, then Varanasi, Agra, Delhi, all mind-blowing adventures. I thought about Goa but instead took an overland bus back to Europe, then back to Montreal by June 76. Since then I continued what I'd call 'creative writing' or surreal/psychedelic poetry, magic realism. Before this trip I'd spent about 4 years travelling/hitching around Europe and the USA/California also the 'hippie trail'. My writing has continued growing with other art and is blossoming with the seeds from previous journeys so today my writing is heavily influenced, evolving from my 'hippy roots' and their focus on humanity reflected in my latest commentaries on what's happening in the world and to nature and its people. I am offering all my books which are free on smashwords as pdfs to such a link

(altho I am not very good with online work) especially the earlier ones describing my life on the hippie~ trail up to 2000 and after that I've lived 25 winter seasons in Goa so there is that aspect of sharing my life experiences up to date. I also propose this idea of a link to a list of books written by so many amazing
authors, members of this group. Thankyou * Om Shanti Om [https://sunnyjetsun.com/

"Their company, The Wonderful Company, owns 15 million trees and 185,000 acres, four times the size of San Francisco. Stuart and Lynda Resnick, they don't live on farms. But they own more farmland than almost anyone on Earth. And with it, more water than the city of Los Angeles" <https://x.com/TheSkayeth/status/1907722124275453975>

During the 2011–2017 California drought - also called the Great Drought - Resnick's

Paramount

Farms, which is part of the Wonderful Company, drilled twenty-one new wells in 2015 alone.^[3]

Resnick is the wealthiest farmer in the United States, with a net worth exceeding nine billion dollars

according to a 2020 article in Forbes magazine, and owns a majority stake in the Kern Water Bank, one of California's largest underground water storage facilities, which is capable of storing 500 billion gallons [1.9 billion m³]. The Kern Water Bank, though privately owned, profits from water sales through publicly funded water transportation systems. The acquisition, continuing private ownership, and water sales profit from this taxpayer-developed resource infrastructure, while in the Central Valley - a single almond can require up to 1.1 US gallons (4.2 L) of water^[18] has drawn criticism during California's ongoing drought. According to Forbes magazine...

California suffers under drought, is controversial.^{[9][17]} Growing water-intensive nut tree crops

The Wonderful Company uses "at least 120 billion gallons [450 million m³] a year, two-thirds on nuts, enough to supply San Francisco's 852,000 residents for a decade".^[19] In an effort to make their impact on the region more positive, the Resnicks have invested in the growth of the local economy and nutrition centers.^{[20][21]} As the New York Times notes,

"In Lost Hills there are new health centers, new pre-K facilities, new housing projects, new gardens, new sidewalks and lights, a new community center and a new soccer field."^[22] They have partnered with the Central Valley Project and the State Water Project to bring water to Kern County, having spent $35 million in recent years buying up more water from nearby districts to replenish the

they import Fiji bottled water from the South Pacific. Some foreign conservationists criticize the Resnicks for "hogging the archipelago's precious water supply, while island natives didn't always have water to drink themselves, due to crumbling and insufficient infrastructure.^[19]

local officials support the investment Fiji water makes in the economy as "a critical contributor to the Fijian Economy and a gift to the Fijian tourism industry."^[24] In 2015, it was revealed that the Resnicks and other farmers had been watering their orchards with treated fracking waste water.^[25] A water recycling program in California allows oil companies to sell waste water to landowners, including farmers like the Wonderful Company." Wikipedia

"AUTHOR UNKNOWN TO ME"

"Ever wondered what it takes to break a person's spirit completely? Richard Burton's portrayal of O'Brien in "Nineteen Eighty-Four" is a chilling and authoritative performance that embodies the terrifying power of totalitarianism. Directed by Michael Radford and based on George Orwell's dystopian novel, the film follows Winston Smith (John Hurt), a man living under the oppressive regime of Big Brother. O'Brien, high-ranking member of the Party, initially appears as a sympathetic figure but later reveals himself as the agent of Winston's destruction. O'Brien is a character defined by his cold intellect, manipulation, and unwavering belief in the Party's ideology. Burton's portrayal captures O'Brien's sinister calmness, his methodical approach to breaking Winston's will. The film explores themes of power, control, and the erasure of individuality. The film's climax, where O'Brien subjects Winston to psychological and physical torture to force him to betray his deepest beliefs, is a harrowing and unforgettable moment.

Burton's performance is both commanding and terrifying, making "Nineteen Eighty-Four"

of absolute power and the fragility of human resistance in the face of overwhelming oppression."

'Tired of the 'Me, Mine, Myself' reality? ❤️ Journey to Venus & back with Sunny Jetsun's mind-bending poetry! 🌈 Explore love, consciousness, and freedom beyond the ego's limits ~

#CosmicConsciousness #LoveBeyondTheMind #FreeYourSpirit

*'Psychic*Psychedelic' is unconventional and often a stream-of-consciousness account of spiritual* journeys, philosophical musings, and social commentary by Sunny Jetsun. The text explores themes of consciousness, enlightenment, the interconnectedness of all things, and the challenges of navigating a world riddled with exploitation and violence. Jetsun liberally blends personal anecdotes with reflections on topics ranging from quantum physics and environmental concerns to the nature of reality and the pitfalls of modern society. The writing style is characterized by a free-flowing, fragmented narrative, rich with imagery and suggestive of a psychedelic mind-state."

Jetsun's understanding of consciousness, spirituality, and the nature of reality encourages a shedding of external structures and a surrender to the present moment, which contrasts with the Western emphasis on rational thought, individual achievement, and material acquisition.

While the sources don't explicitly detail mainstream Western thought, they do offer Jetsun's perspectives, which can be understood as diverging from some Western norms.

Jetsun encourages a release from the confines of the ego and a recognition of the interconnectedness of all things, stating that "there is No 'I AM' there is No Ego, No You, you become One with the Divine". This perspective contrasts with the Western emphasis on *individualism and self-achievement. * Jetsun advocates for a deep connection with nature ~*

*Navigating Challenges with Jetsun's Ideas. While the sources do not explicitly lay out a set of "practical applications" for Jetsun's ideas, they repeatedly emphasize several key themes that can be used to navigate personal and societal challenges:

Embrace Impermanence: ~ Jetsun emphasizes the ever-changing nature of reality,

*urging acceptance of impermanence rather than clinging to fixed ideas or desires ~
This perspective can help navigate challenges by fostering adaptability and resilience in the face of life's inevitable changes.*

 Challenge the Ego: Jetsun encourages questioning the ego's grip on our perceptions and actions. Recognizing the ego's role in creating suffering, conflict, and attachment can* lead to greater self-awareness and compassion, enabling us to respond to challenges with more clarity and less reactivity.

 *Cultivate Mindfulness: * Jetsun emphasizes presence and awareness in the present moment ~*

Cultivating mindfulness through meditation and self-reflection can help us become more attuned

*to our thoughts, feelings, and sensations, allowing us to approach challenges with greater clarity

 Seek Connection and Compassion: * Jetsun underscores the interconnectedness of all beings and encourages compassion as a guiding principle. Recognizing our shared humanity can help us approach personal and societal challenges with greater understanding, empathy, and a desire for collective well-being.*

By applying these themes, individuals can potentially navigate personal challenges like addiction, fear, and relationship issues with greater awareness, acceptance, and self-compassion. On a societal level, these principles could contribute to addressing issues like conflict, inequality, and environmental destruction by fostering dialogue, understanding, and a sense of shared responsibility.

manner, leaving room for individual interpretation and application.

 Jetsun's understanding of consciousness, spirituality, and the nature of reality encourages a shedding of external structures and a surrender to the present moment, which contrasts with* the Western emphasis on rational thought, individual achievement, and material acquisition.

While the sources don't explicitly detail mainstream Western thought, they do offer Jetsun's perspectives, which can be understood as diverging from some Western norms.

 Jetsun encourages a release from the confines of the ego and a recognition of the interconnectedness of all things, stating that "there is No 'I AM' ~ there is No Ego, No You ~ If YOU don't exist you become One with God". This perspective contrasts with the Western emphasis on individualism and self-achievement.*

Jetsun advocates for a deep connection with nature, suggesting that spending time disconnected from technology and reconnecting with the natural world can lead to a shift in perception:

"Embrace No TV, smart phone, media for a whole month, and watch everywhere how the World Changes". This perspective contrasts with the Western emphasis on technology and progress.

 Jetsun emphasizes living in the present moment, as opposed to dwelling on the past or future, stating that "Life is being Alive ~ belonging to the Universe It's All One nature ~ go wherever you want to go".*

This stands in contrast to the Western preoccupation with planning for the future and analysing the past.

 Overall, Jetsun encourages a surrender to the present moment, a shedding of the ego, and a deep connection with nature as pathways to experience the true nature of reality.*

The author of "Forked Tongues ~ Cognitive Dissonance" ~ doesn't directly state examples of cognitive dissonance. However, the text itself can be seen as an illustration of this concept.

The author presents a rapid-fire collection of contradictory ideas, pronouncements, and observations, potentially mirroring the mental discomfort of experiencing cognitive dissonance.

For example:

 The text juxtaposes idyllic imagery of nature, peace, and love with harsh realities of violence, control, and environmental destruction. This forces the reader to confront the contrast between the world as they might wish it to be and the troubling state it appears to be in.*

 The author presents a stream of consciousness that jumps between seemingly disparate ideas, conspiracy theories, spiritual concepts, and personal anecdotes. This chaotic presentation could be interpreted as reflecting the internal confusion and discomfort of trying to reconcile conflicting beliefs and information.*

 The text repeatedly highlights hypocrisy and double standards, particularly among those in power.*

This could evoke cognitive dissonance in readers who hold beliefs about fairness, justice, and equality while being confronted with evidence that contradicts those beliefs.

"Provided text, taken from "True Freedom", is a compilation of writings by Sunny Jetsun that explores the nature of true freedom, spiritual awakening, and the illusory nature of the material world. The book blends philosophical insights with personal experiences, advocating for a connection to the universal energy and a liberation from societal conditioning, political manipulation, and materialistic desires.

The text criticizes contemporary propaganda, war, and social injustices, urging readers to seek authentic

The provided text, an excerpt from

"Peace-goddess-spirit-of-the-field-the-intimacy-sutras.pdf," presents a stream of consciousness-style exploration of spirituality, love, and life. The writing blends personal experiences, philosophical musings, and a critique of societal structures, all interwoven with references to Eastern spirituality, psychedelic experiences, and social and political commentary.

The author uses a chaotic and fragmented style to express their own journey toward self-discovery and acceptance, advocating for a more conscious and loving approach to life.

The source text, "Consciousness Love Spaces.pdf," is a collection of poems and musings that explore themes of love, spirituality, consciousness, and the interconnectedness of all things ~

Author, Sunny Jetsun, uses a variety of poetic forms and imagery to express his views on the nature of reality, the importance of compassion and empathy, and the need for a paradigm shift away from the destructive forces of greed, violence, and societal control. Throughout the text, he weaves together elements of Eastern philosophy, mysticism, personal experiences, and social commentary, creating a unique blend of poetic reflection and philosophical inquiry.

“This final excerpt discusses the devastating effects of sexual violence against women, particularly within patriarchal societies. It highlights the use of rape as a weapon of war, citing the Bosnian conflict as an example, and links such violence to repressed sexual energies and a lack of consensual love. The author argues societal structures which condone male dominance enable these atrocities. The text emphasizes the importance of consensual sexual expression for healthy relationships and contrasts this with the destructive consequences of repressed sexuality and societal oppression. Ultimately, the excerpt advocates for a shift towards equality and mutual respect in relationships to prevent such violence.”

Evaluating “The Devil’s Advocates Burning in the Cosmic Light”

Comparing it to current events involving the new Trump presidency and Elon Musk’s DOGE efforts requires a nuanced understanding of both the book’s themes and the contemporary context.

Book Overview

The book appears to be a literary collage that incorporates elements of surrealism, metaphors, and critical thinking. It touches on themes of cosmic consciousness, freedom, and the critique of societal structures, including political and economic systems. The author, Sunny Jetsun, weaves together philosophical insights, poetic narratives, and critiques of modern society, emphasizing the importance of love, consciousness, and human rights.

Comparison to Current Events, ### Trump Presidency
Political and Social Critique. The book critiques systems of power and control, which aligns with criticisms of the Trump presidency. Trump's presidency was marked by controversy, including allegations of authoritarian tendencies and divisive rhetoric. The book's themes of challenging established power structures and promoting human rights resonate with these 1 critiques.

2. Environmental and Social Justice: The book highlights the loss of biodiversity and economic inequality, issues that were also relevant during Trump's presidency. Trump's administration was criticized for its environmental policies, including withdrawal from the Paris Climate Agreement, which contrasts with the book's emphasis on harmony with nature.

Elon Musk's DOGE Efforts

Technological and Economic Trends: Elon Musk's involvement with DOGE (Dogecoin) reflects broader trends in cryptocurrency and digital finance. While the book does not directly address cryptocurrencies, it discusses the intersection of technology and society, particularly in terms of control and freedom. Musk's efforts can be seen as part of a larger conversation about the role of technology in shaping economic and social futures.

Influence and Power Dynamics: Musk's influence on financial markets through his tweets about

DOGE illustrates how individual figures can shape public discourse and economic trends. This aligns with the book's exploration of power dynamics and how individuals can impact societal narratives.

Conclusion

"The Devil's Advocates Burning in the Cosmic Light" offers a philosophical and poetic critique of modern society, emphasizing themes of freedom, consciousness, and human rights. When compared to current events like the Trump presidency and Elon Musk's DOGE efforts, the book's themes resonate with broader discussions about power, technology, and societal critique.

However, the book's focus on cosmic consciousness and surrealism provide a unique perspective that diverges from the more concrete political and economic issues associated with these current events.

"The-Fantastic-Trips-of-a-Cosmic-Angel"

Introduction: This document analyzes the main themes, ideas, and facts presented in "The-fantastic-trips-of-a-cosmic-angel" a work that blends personal reflection, spiritual inquiry, and social commentary with a highly unconventional and often psychedelic style. The document is organized to highlight the key recurring motifs and arguments made throughout the text. The source itself appears to be a stream-of-consciousness style, mixing personal anecdotes and observations, spiritual and esoteric references,

social and political critiques, and philosophical ponderings.

I. Core Themes:

Spiritual Awakening and Cosmic Consciousness: The text emphasizes a journey toward spiritual enlightenment, often through altered states of consciousness. This is evident in phrases like "fields of a body with streams and stars of hearts," and "Streaming Lemon Topaz Sunbeams."

There is a strong sense that we are all interconnected and part of a larger, cosmic whole:

"We're all Cosmic vibration." The author advocates for a transcendence of ego and a focus on inner spirit: "Without spirit there's no light on inside." The book also explores the concept of cosmic love and its importance: "Feeling ~ Energy that Is LOVE in Itself".

Critique of the Material World & Systems of Control: A major theme is a deep distrust of established systems and institutions, including government, finance, and technology. The author is particularly critical of centralized power structures and their potential for control and manipulation:

"Who is strangling the public narrative, a Military-Industrial-Financial-Oil-Media-Congress, who else Satan?"

This extends to concerns about AI, surveillance, and the erosion of personal freedom:

"You Are a Slave

in a Psyche-PANOPTICON, -Prison for your 'Mind'." There is a fear of technology that separates us from our humanity: "Androids, cyborgs, robots are Artificially-Augmented-reality given an identity by those who empower them for ultimately their own motives. They are Not Real." The author also expresses concerns about the financial system and its exploitation of the people:

"Institutional Creation of prefabricated, massive, phony Debt!"

Call for Revolution and Freedom: The work is a call to action, urging readers to resist oppression and embrace freedom, both internal and external. There are multiple references to "revolution" 'Enjoy the Revolution' and 'Love & Freedom ~ Welcome' The text promotes critical thinking and questioning of authority: "You have the right to live your life privately without government interference"

It advocates for living authentically, embracing individuality, and connecting with the natural world.
